Mr. MORGAN. Nothing to it, nothing added to it, and nothing of it more than is there. It has been submitted to Mr. Raum and he speaks of it as a matter that has his recommendation after due consideration. The subject has often been presented. The Senator must not overlook the fact that there are a great many persons in this country who do not employ more than three or four or five men, who would like to have this privilege and who ought not to be taxed for it.

Mr. BLAIR. Those individuals, however, still have to pay their $2.40 license fee.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means, unless they consume more than 100 pounds, and not in the issue of supplies or rations to their laboring people.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the effect is to relieve the man who has this gang of laborers from the $2.40 license, and it also relieves the 100 pounds from taxation.

Mr. MORGAN. It is to relieve him from being indicted and being brought into a circuit or district court of the United States if he lives fifty miles from civilization cutting logs in a pinery or if he is cultivating a cotton field and in a remote border from being brought in for trial because he supplied a plug of tobacco to one of his operatives.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think any man living as remote from civilization and conducting the lumber business on any reasonably extensive scale would care for this amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Not if the scale was reasonably extensive in the estimation of the Senator. I do not know what scale the Senator would think reasonably extensive, but there are a great many persons who have to employ people and who do not wish to be indicted and brought into court because they sell a plug of tobacco or supply it as rations to one of their operatives. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there any danger of their being indicted and brought into court?

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose so from the fact that Mr. Raum says this subject has been often under consideration in his Department. He recognized the proposition. There is, therefore, danger.

Mr. BLAIR. He simply says it will not do any particular harm. I do not see that it does any good.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not his language. He recommends it. Let the Senate pass upon it; I do not care to debate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill to the proviso in section [3] 4.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 4, [3,] line 2, after the word "or," to strike out "use" and insert "sale on and after the 1st day of October, 1882;" so as to read:

That on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale on and after the 1st day of January, 1883, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof: on cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, $4 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, 75 cents per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $4 per thousand.

Mr. MAHONE. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "thousand."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia to the words in italics in the second and third lines or later on in the section?

Mr. MAHONE. After the word "thousand" in the tenth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That point is not yet reached. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance in lines 2 and 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to insert, after "thousand," in line 10 of the section:

That on and after the 1st day of January, 1883, there shall be levied and collected upon all snuff manufactured of tobacco, or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use; and upon all chewing and smoking tobacco, fine-cut, cavendish, plug, or twist, cut or granulated, of every description; on tobacco twisted by hand or reduced into a condition to be consumed, or in any manner, other than the ordinary mode of drying and curing, prepared for sale or consumption, even if prepared without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed or sweetened; and on all fine-cut shorts and refuse scraps, clippings, cuttings, and sweepings of tobacco, a tax of 8 cents per pound.

Mr. President, the amendment is in the exact language of the present statute, and there is no change in it except as to the rate. It is proposed to reduce the rate from 16 cents to 8. I have nothing to add to what I said in behalf of this amendment a few days ago, further than to call the attention of the Senate to the impression which I have that the reduction from 16 to 12 cents a pound or one-quarter of a cent per ounce, will effect but little more than a reduction in the revenue of about $6,000,000. It will carry very little comfort or relief either to the producer or the consumer, since the packages in which tobacco is sold are in all cases fractions of the pound, so that when we have a reduction of one-quarter of a cent an ounce, for a 2-ounce package it is a half cent, and we have no currency which will meet such a contingency, and in such a case the retail dealer is not going to make a reduction, but he is going to take this diminution of the tax himself. Hence I say the reduction of one-quarter of a cent to the ounce will not carry fully the relief that is designed either to the producer or to the consumer, whereas on the other hand the reduction of half a cent to the ounce makes a reduction of 1 cent on the smallest package, a margin sufficient to incite competition between the dealers, and thus carry to the consumer and to the producer the relief which you would afford.

The difference in the aggregate is $12,000,000; that between 12 cents and 8 cents is $6,000,000; between 16 and 8 of course it is $12,000,000. The entire tax now amounts to about $26,000,000.

Mr. President, if we mean to afford any relief to the consumer and to the producer in this matter of the tobacco tax, it seems to me we ought to fix it at such a rate as will make the reduction inure to the consumer and the producer. There is but one opinion, and that opinion is universal with the manufacturing interest of the country, and that is that if there is to be any reduction in this tax it ought to be 8 cents.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I favor the reduction of this tax to 8 cents, for several reasons. In the first place, as I have already stated on the floor of the Senate, I consider it important to reduce this tax to such a point as will tend to prevent agitation for its reduction to a lower rate. If it is put at 8 cents, there will never be any more agitation for a reduction below 8 cents. After that time the only agitation will be for the total abolition of it; and a reduction to 8 cents will prevent the recurrence of the agitation on the subject of the reduction of the tax, which is so injurious to the trade. For that reason I think it ought to be put at 8 cents.

In addition to that, the classes that we ought to seek to relieve are the consumers and producers; and the reduction of this tax ought to be to a rate that we know will afford relief to them. The manufacturers would like to have it 8 cents, but the question of taxation is less important to them than it is to the man who raises the tobacco or the man who consumes it; and in the interest of consumer and producer both, I am very earnest in desiring the reduction of the tax to 8 cents, believing, as I say, that it will stop further agitation, that it will benefit the man who raises tobacco, and will benefit the man who consumes tobacco and will not have any injurious effect upon the revenue.

I trust this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if this amendment is adopted it makes the reduction thus far of internal revenue over $40,000,000. Thirteen million dollars and over is on account of the reduction proposed by the amendment, counting on the basis of the returns of the year 1881; and this, with the other taxes modified and repealed makes the aggregate $40,000,000. If the Senate have made up their mind that they are going to give all the relief that can be given now to the people by a reduction of taxes or internal revenue on such articles as have been depicted by Senators on the other side, perfumery and cosmetics and banks and tobacco, leaving no relief from taxation on any other articles, then probably it is just as well that the amendment be adopted and there stop, because it is manifest that if we are to be governed by the ordinary prudential motives that influence business men we ought not to endanger our whole financial system, the balance of our revenues after paying the sinking fund, by the reduction of any more taxes. The $150,000,000 surplus of which we have heard so much is gone. Every sensible man who knows that the country has been very prosperous during the past few years and that our revenues have been greater than ever before, unless he believes that state of things is to continue and increase, must see that we have gone to the end of the tether. We know now already that we have increased the appropriations some $40,000,000 over what they were last year. We know also that there is a deficiency made by the operation of our pension laws over and above the amount appropriated of $20,000,000 or $25,000,000. We know that after the application of the sinking fund and making provision for these expenses the $150,000,000 is reduced to $40,000,000, and yet we propose now by these amendments to internal taxation to provide for throwing off taxes to that amount.

So, then, we can expect, as the most favorable and hopeful view of our finances during the present year, to have revenues equal to our expenditures and not much more. I had hoped, however, that instead of these numerous amendments prevailing and this wide range of debate on this bill, and tactics as remarkable as I have ever known in my Congressional life, we should be able to throw off other burdens besides those imposed by the internal-revenue laws. It was on that view that the Senate Finance Committee finally agreed to propose some reductions on other taxes. But if this amendment is adopted, as I fear it will be from the votes already taken, we are in no condition to throw off any more taxes.

Mr. LOGAN. It will not be adopted if all our folks vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator says it will not be adopted if they all vote. I am not so sure about that. At any rate we have got now to choose; we have come to that path where the ways turn. If we propose to make any reduction of external taxes, or to have the ability to reduce taxes next winter when the tariff commission may make a report, we cannot go so far as we have gone in the removal of internal taxation. Senators sometimes say that we have repealed foolishly a great many taxes that were not burdensome. That has been discussed and decided by a majority of the Senate; a majority of the Senate have considered that it is best to reduce and repeal all taxes derived from internal revenue except on whisky, tobacco, and beer. That is the judgment of the Senate and the judgment of the House by an overwhelming majority, and it is the opinion of the country. I do not hesitate to say that there is a general desire among all classes of our people, without regard to party, that the remnants of the internal-revenue system shall be swept away except on whisky, tobacco, and beer. You have done that already by your votes here, repeated over and over again, by decided majorities in many cases. That has passed and gone. If now you add to these reductions a reduction of the tobacco tax you but exhaust your ability to reduce taxes.

Now, is it wise to do it? This tobacco tax of all others is the easiest collected, the most certain, increasing constantly from year to year, depending upon an appetite that will be indulged no matter what may be the tax, a tax that has been more stable than any other. No amount of tax likely to be put on tobacco will prevent its being smoked and chewed and snuffed. In all other countries where taxation prevails this is a favorite subject of taxation. In England, France, and Prussia, and in every other country where taxation prevails, tobacco yields a much larger portion of the revenue than in our country. As we produce tobacco there is a constant collision between the producers of tobacco and the tax on tobacco——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me, at that point I should like to ask him to bear in mind that in England no tobacco is produced; very little in Prussia, and only a few plants in France, and their whole system of taxing tobacco is a tax on imports from other countries, particularly the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said a moment ago that the fact that we produce tobacco made the tax on tobacco less popular here than in any other country. In Prussia they raise tobacco, and they do in France, but they do not in Great Britain. They make it a monopoly in France and Prussia with a view to get the highest possible tax, and their tax on tobacco is much larger than ours and yields much more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, but their tax is on tobacco that they import from this country. They send agents here and buy our tobacco and the governments there sell it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In England the tax on leaf tobacco is 75 cents a pound and the tax on manufactured tobacco $1.25 a pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said all that, only not so well as my friend.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are taxing our own farmers and our own consumers while they are taxing us, taxing a foreign product, because nearly all the tobacco consumed in those countries is produced in the United States. Foreign imports are what they are taxing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am amazed at my friend from Kentucky. I supposed as a matter of course the consumer paid the tax, according to the well-established logic of the Democrats in all cases. Let me say to him that the tax on tobacco in this country has not affected in the least the value of the tobacco raised by the farmer, and the statistics will show that the farmer gets more for his tobacco since it has been taxed by our system of taxation than he did before; it is less variable in price, more certain in results, and larger in amount. Ohio is by far a larger tobacco-growing State than Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Look at the returns——

Mr. WILLIAMS. My dear sir, the returns show that Kentucky produces 40 per cent. of all that is produced in the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Look at the returns——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have looked at the returns, and I know without looking.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to the manufacture of tobacco, we manufacture two to one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes. I thought you spoke of the production of tobacco.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we do produce more, but I am not sure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Kentucky produces nearly 40 per cent. of all the tobacco that is produced in the United States. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the tables before me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the Senator says that the tax does not diminish the price of tobacco in the hands of the farmer, the man who produces it, I know he is mistaken. I have information about it, because I am a tobacco-raiser myself, and I understand this whole business that I am talking about. I know that I sold my crop of tobacco before the reduction of the tax from 24 cents to 16 cents a pound, and when that 8 cents was taken off I got for my very next crop, which was not a particle better, $4 per one hundred pounds more than I did for the crop I sold before the tax was taken off, which was exactly half the diminution of the tax. The tax was reduced 8 cents a pound and the price of tobacco increased 4 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must take advantage of my friend's admission. He says that when the tax on tobacco was reduced from 24 cents a pound to 16 cents he only got the benefit of one-half or 4 cents. If you reduce it again another 8 cents he will only get the benefit of one-half the reduction, or four cents. So what is the use to the farmer of reducing the tax?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The consumer will get the benefit of the other half.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say the tax on tobacco does not diminish the price to the farmer who raises it. The price of tobacco depends on whether the crop is good or bad, just as any other crop; and I say we are throwing off a tax which, by the judgment of all civilized nations, is the best source of taxation, and we are doing it at a time when we were hopeful of a reduction of both internal and external taxation. We are exhausting our surplus revenue by reducing the taxes which are least burdensome and most easily collected. Then when the Democratic party are called upon to face the solution of the tariff question they will have found that they have wasted the golden eagles which they hoped to have thrown off the tariff list.

I should like to call a halt if it is not too late. It may be too late. It may be that this bill is to be defeated, as my colleague once said in the House, "kicked to pieces by grasshoppers and eaten by pismires," (that was the way he expressed it,) defeated by amendment after amendment in the last expiring days of the session.

It may be that the end of this contest will be a proposition to repeal $40,000,000 of internal taxation, with no margin left in which to reduce external taxation. The committee, on the other hand, thought it was better to continue the tobacco tax, because it is a tax easy to collect, cheaply collected, easily borne, and borne by people who choose to indulge in an appetite which probably they had better be without. The Committee on Finance thought it was better to present the alternative of giving some relief from the sugar tax by removing the addition which was levied in 1875, rather than to take off a tax which can be so easily collected, like the tobacco tax. But if we are outvoted we must submit and let the majority select the repeal of the tobacco tax, rather than a reduction of the sugar tax.

By the reduction of the sugar tax we shall reduce the price of sugar in every household of this broad land from 1 to 1½ cents a pound. By the reduction of the tobacco tax you may take off a little, perhaps, from the consumer; he may get his 4-ounce plug or 4-ounce package of tobacco at 9 cents instead of 10 cents, but the probability is that the dealer will put on the additional cent to make change, or the improvident habits of our people will induce them to stick to the 10 cents. I do not believe the consumer will get the tobacco substantially any cheaper; the dealer will get it cheaper. We throw off a tax, therefore, which is easily borne by those who are willing to pay it, and thus prevent ourselves from relieving our people from a tax which bears equally upon all the families of this country.

But the argument has been exhausted so far as I am concerned. I do not want in these expiring hours of the session to prolong a debate which may be useless. If it is deemed best to throw off this tax of $40,000,000, so be it. As I said before, the people of Ohio are interested in producing tobacco. We do not raise as much as they do in Kentucky, but we make twice as much of the manufactured article. We can stand it if the rest can; but the sober judgment of the people will say that in the disposition of this tax question we have not acted as wisely as the House of Representatives have acted. I would rather take the bill naked as it was sent to us by the House and pass it just as it came here without amendment. They have considered this question much more wisely than we have, leaving the tariff question until the next session of Congress. We have stripped ourselves of the ability to reduce taxes derived from customs duties.

Mr. JONAS. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am through. I give way entirely.

Mr. JONAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio how he expects the price of sugar to be reduced 1½ or 2 cents a pound by a proposed reduction in the tariff of half to three-quarters of a cent?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken; the average rate is 2½ cents.

Mr. JONAS. The average rate on sugars imported is from 1¾ to 2¼ cents. The reduction of 25 per cent. would be a reduction only of three quarters of a cent a pound on the highest grades usually imported into this country. I ask the Senator how is that to reduce the price of sugar from 1½ to 2 cents a pound?

Mr. SHERMAN. About a cent a pound; the rate ranges now at 2¼ cents a pound, I believe.

Mr. BAYARD. One and three-quarters.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; one and three-quarters is the old rate, to which we restore it. The present duty is two cents and nearly a quarter.

Mr. JONAS. Supposing it is three, it is only reduced three-quarters of a cent a pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JONAS. I have here the tariff. Not above No. 7 it is 2.18 cents a pound; above No. 7 and not above No. 10, of which the largest amount is imported into the country, 2½ cents a pound. On sugars above No. 10 and not above No. 13, 2.81 cents a pound. Very little sugar is imported into the country over that grade. A reduction of 25 per cent., which is all that the bill proposes, would be less than three-quarters of a cent a pound upon this superior grade of sugar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the official figures here, and when I read them I think the Senator will see the difference: all sugars not above No. 7 Dutch standard, $2\frac{9}{16}$ cents a pound; above No. 7 to No. 10, 2½; above No. 10 to No. 13, $2\frac{13}{16}$; above No. 13 to No. 16, $3\frac{7}{16}$; above No. 16 to No. 20, $4\frac{1}{16}$; above No. 20, 5.

Mr. JONAS. I ask the Senator how much is imported into this country above No. 16 or even above No. 13?

Mr. SHERMAN. Nearly all the sugar imported in this country is by the admixture of foreign articles, and by a new process reduced to below No. 7 Dutch standard, but that will be corrected by this bill. Until the decision of the Supreme Court there was no doubt but what the grade of sugar ranged from about No. 10 to No. 13, but now by this new process of coloring they have reduced the grade nearly all below No. 7 Dutch standard.

Mr. KELLOGG. So that reducing the tariff will benefit the refiner, not the consumer.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Ohio read the duties on sugar once more?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have lost the place. It is in Heyl's Import Duties. I will send the book to the Senator.

Mr. JONAS. I wish to show, as I did the other day, what sort of sugars are imported into this country. I take the customs returns as I find them. I cannot assume as the Senator does that there are great frauds perpetrated in the collection of duties. We have no proof here. It has been so asserted, and I think the issue has been tried in the courts at the instance of the Senator when Secretary of the Treasury, with a result unfavorable to the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, the Senator is mistaken. Both courts and juries in every case have decided in favor of the Government, but the Supreme Court finally held that the law was defective, and that the refiner had the right to put in this foreign admixture, and that Congress, as the Supreme Court said, should at once correct it.

Mr. JONAS. I will read the tariff rates on sugar again:

On sugars not above No. 7 Dutch standard, 1¾ cents plus 25 per cent., 2.18 cents.
On sugars above No. 7 and not above No. 10, 2 cents plus 25 per cent., 2.50 cents.
On sugars above No. 10 and not above No. 13, 2¼ cents plus 25 per cent., 2.81 cents.
On sugars above No. 13 and not above No. 16, 2¾ cents plus 25 per cent., 3.43 cents.

I will also call attention to the importations last year. There were imported of dutiable sugars 1,869,173,897½ pounds to the value of $82,721,087.27. On those sugars not above No. 7 Dutch standard the duty paid was $15,395,744.01, and on that grade of sugar the tariff is 2.18 cents a pound. Above No. 7 and not above No. 10, $20,216,407.36. The duty on those sugars is 2½ cents a pound. Above No. 10 and not above No. 13, $7,044,675.40. Of the higher grades above No. 13 and not above No. 16, where the duty is 3.43 cents a pound, the whole quantity imported amounted to $62,123.30, and above those grades, between Nos. 16 and 20, to $497.29. Above No. 20, and all refined, loaf, lump, crushed, powdered, and granulated sugar, to $934.95.

Thus the great majority of the sugars imported into the country pay only a duty of 2.18 to 2½ cents on the pound. Allowing that all paid 3 cents a pound, this reduction would be only about .75 of a cent a pound, and yet the Senator from Ohio says it will bring sugar into every man's household from a cent and a half to two cents cheaper than the present price. The fact is it will reduce the price to the importer and refiner something under 60 cents a pound.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I only want to make one observation, and that is, as there seems to be considerable dispute between the honorable Senator from Ohio and my colleague in regard to this matter, and as the honorable Senator from Ohio stated a few moments ago that the House had acted very wisely, and he commended the action of the House in referring all these issues to the tariff commission which we dwelt so much upon and authorized the President to appoint, I want to suggest to him that it would be proper to leave this very intricate question of the tariff on sugar until the tariff commission can consider it in connection with the tariff on woolens and all other commodities. I think what is sauce for the goose, to use a homely expression, is sauce for the gander. I commend that to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, I have very great respect for the views of the Senator from Ohio; his caution is admirable; but I submit that it does not follow because we propose to reduce the tax on tobacco from 16 cents to 8 cents, that we are to have a corresponding reduction in the revenue. Our experience is to the contrary, for it will be observed that during sixteen and two-thirds years, under a variable tax ranging over 25 cents to the pound, the average revenue was a fraction over $17,000,000; and, on the other hand, since the reduction of the tax from 24 cents to 16 cents we have had an average revenue during the two and two-thirds years under that rate of taxation of over $43,000,000. I hold that the apprehensions of the Senator from Ohio are unduly excited, and that we are not to have such a reduction in revenue as corresponds directly with the reduction in the rate.

Again, I must insist that a reduction in the tax operates to stimulate production as well as a growth in revenue, because we have seen that during the sixteen and two-thirds years when the tax was over 25 cents the production as measured by the amount of the leaf manufactured was 126,000,000 pounds, whereas under the existing rate of taxation of 16 cents the amount was two hundred and fifty odd million pounds. I submit it does not follow because we reduce the tax that we are to have a corresponding reduction in the revenue, and there is justification in making a reduction when you undertake to make one that will go to the relief of the consumer and the producer.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word, and that will be rather general. I do not agree with the Senator from Virginia in reference to the results which will be produced by a reduction of the tax on tobacco. It is not a fact in my judgment by any means that the reduction of the tax on tobacco has increased the production, as he suggests. In order to understand that you must take into account the condition of things at the time, the amount on hand, the increase of population, and everything of that kind, besides the efficiency in collecting the tax. I do not wish to go into any of these matters. I have examined them somewhat, but I do not wish to take the time of the Senate in discussing them.

I rose merely to say that I do not admire the sort of statesmanship which will denounce day after day the protective tariff system, as it is called, adopted by the Republican party in this country, the tariff on salt and other things, and exhibit great desire to reduce it, and then at the same time by votes and amendments do the very things that will prevent the reduction of the tariff being realized, so that it will be fair and just to all parts of the country. The course being taken here is the very thing that will keep the tariff exactly where it is. When a Senator rises and talks about salt that goes to the table of every person in the United States, and nearly all over the civilized world, and who, while discoursing upon the subject of salt and other things will at the same time, for the purpose of taking the tax off an article produced in one or two States, largely disregard the general welfare of the whole country, and a fair distribution of taxation to weigh equally upon all parts of the country, it is not the character of statesmanship that I admire.

It is a well-known fact, as has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, that the tax on tobacco and whisky is a tax collected in every civilized nation, and is one of the greatest sources of revenue in nearly all countries, because it is easily collected; it is a tax the people generally do not complain of, and a tax that nobody asks to be taken off except a few persons. So far as tobacco is concerned, there were no petitions of any consequence presented at any time to the Congress of the United States asking relief on account of the tax on that article.

Tobacco and whisky in this country are two articles which ought to bear their proportion of taxation for the reasons which have been suggested, that the tax is easily collected, that it is a tax the people do not complain of, and they are articles which ought to bear their proportionate burden of the taxation of the people of this country. But because a man chews tobacco he must be relieved from taxation; because a man drinks whisky he must be relieved from taxation; because a man eats salt and sugar the tax must be kept up. I do not understand that kind of reasoning. Just as certain as you reduce the tax on tobacco and reduce the tax on whisky, and bring the taxation of this country down to the point where the necessities of the Government require a certain amount of revenue, just so certain you will not be able to reduce on anything else.

You talk about the tariff on iron, the tariff on steel, the tariff on hoop-iron, the tariff on sugar, the tariff on salt, the tariff on goods of different kinds, and you think it is too high, and you make attacks every day upon the party which has put it there, and yet at the same time you do the very act that will keep it there. The Senator from Kentucky knows the fact that every dollar he takes off tobacco if the Government requires a revenue has got to be put on somewhere else. It has got to be put on some other article either by direct or indirect taxation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator from Illinois, as he seems to be addressing me, that I do not know any such thing at all. The President in his message, and the Secretary of the Treasury in his report, have stated to us that we had $100,000,000 in the Treasury and the prospect was that the surplus would amount to $150,000,000 the coming year, and they both recommended some reduction in taxation. Therefore I do not see why it is that if you take $20,000,000 tax off tobacco, that $20,000,000 must be collected somewhere else. That does not follow.

Mr. LOGAN. I said if the Government required the revenue it would have to be collected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; but it does not require it.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Government does not require the revenue today, is it a fact that it will not require it to-morrow? Is this prosperity to continue all through the existence of this Government? Statesmen, in my judgment, should take the past into consideration for the purpose of judging of the future. If they would do so they would understand, it seems to me, that we should look well to our condition now. It is impossible for any man to believe that the present condition of this country is going to go on year after year, and that we shall have no disturbance in our trade, no disturbance whatever in our commerce. When I say "disturbance" I mean no change upon what we have now. We find a vast change taking place this very day. Instead of the balance of trade being, as it was a year ago, in our favor, we find that the balance is going against us. If that continues, I want to ask, where are we to derive the revenues of the country?

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the Senator if, in regard to a great many of the articles which he has enumerated, a reduction of the imposts or tariff upon them would not be followed by an increase of revenue instead of a diminution?

Mr. LOGAN. That might be so, as applicable to certain articles, and it might not; I will not say. There are some articles which are taxed so high that they are not imported at all.

Mr. VANCE. Then we get no revenue.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I say that as an illustration would apply; but no matter whether that be true or not, I ask the Senator when he takes off the tax on tobacco, whisky, and articles from which we derive what is called an internal tax, how he proposes to convince the country that a reduction of the tariff is a thing which can be accomplished? Both sides, Democrats and Republicans, in this Chamber are in favor of a reduction of the tariff rates on certain articles, but unless you satisfy the country that the tariff rates need not be kept up for the purpose of producing a revenue you cannot reduce them; and whenever you reduce the internal tax down to that point that the country understands you must have a certain amount of revenue, you foreclose yourselves against a reduction of the taxes commonly called tariff duties. Exactly what I desired to say in reference to the arguments which are made here is that Senators who make arguments every day against high protection, as they call it, take the very course themselves that produces it, and then complain of others.

Sir, I am opposed to the reduction of the tax on tobacco. I voted against it the other day. The tax has been honestly collected, and we derive great revenues from it. The revenues have been increased because of the increase of production, not because of the reduction in taxation, but because of the demand of the country. Nobody is going to produce more than the demand when that is ascertained. The demand for it causes the production. When it is produced the revenues are collected, and fairly collected, and it is a great source of revenue to this country, and it is a tax that is not harsh on anybody.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if a demand for the article which causes an increase of revenue is not occasioned by a reduction in the price?

Mr. LOGAN. In some articles it is; but so far as tobacco is concerned the tax on tobacco has never prevented a man from using it or caused a man to use it.

Mr. BUTLER. It has prevented him from raising it.

Mr. LOGAN. There has always been enough raised, so far as that is concerned. There is no trouble about that.

I have said all I desired to say on this question. I only rose for the purpose of indicating, in my judgment, that the course pursued by Senators was the very course which would bring about the results they did not desire. There are a great many manufacturers of tobacco in my State, a great many tobacco producers in my State. In the Southern part of the State they produce tobacco very extensively, but I have never heard at any time any complaint from any of the people in reference to the tax on tobacco. The complaint is made in reference to tax on other things, and not on tobacco. I have heard it nowhere on tobacco.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio resists the reduction of the tax on tobacco—I do not care about speaking of this particular amendment—because it was so easily collected and there was so little complaint about it, and therefore it ought not be disturbed. He said no petitions have come here asking for the reduction of it. I have been on the Committee on Finance for some time, and I have never seen a petition for the reduction of the tax on matches; I never heard of a petition for the reduction of the tax on patent medicines. If the bankers had petitioned as much as they pleased, when they show us they have dividends of 9, 9½, and 10 per cent. per annum, and a surplus fund of more than $60,000,000, over and above all their capital, owning the finest buildings on every street corner wherever I have been, nobody would have thought they were a very suffering class.

The Senator from Ohio says the bill has been very carefully considered in the House of Representatives and was carefully considered by the committee of the Senate, but it has taken care not to remove one single man of all the army of office-holders, spies, and informers, who roam over this country, and who are paying 2 per cent. of their salaries to the Republican campaign fund. I took occasion just now to go over the list and I find that there are 126 collectors for whom we are appropriating; 1,035 deputy collectors outside of Washington; 191 clerks, messengers, and janitors; 706 gaugers; 1,074 storekeepers and gaugers; 644 storekeepers; 30 deputy inspectors, and 241 clerks, &c., in the Department in Washington, making an army of 4,047, independent of an army of spies and detectives, for whom we are appropriating $100,000 or $150,000 a year, to go wherever they see fit. Not one man of that force is taken off by these gentlemen who are boasting so much of this bill. The bankers paid their taxes direct through the banking system. The match men paid by stamps, and the patent-medicine men did the same thing, and this whole army is left.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if this army of collectors will not have to be continued as long as we continue any tax upon tobacco, and whisky, and beer?

Mr. BECK. But could not the Senator have found something else to have done instead of giving the patent-medicine men $2,200,000 that would have taken some of this army away? That meritorious class of men, who will sell their patent medicines for as much as they did before, are relieved from taxation. I think he could if he had been looking in that direction. This little army of 4,047 at an average of $2,000 a year salary cost $8,094,000, and 2 per cent. on that is over $160,000 to the Republican campaign fund. That is the great item to which I suppose Senators were looking, and the maintenance of which I suppose they think is indispensable.

Mr. MORGAN. That tax collects itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. Yes, the tax collects itself.

Mr. VANCE. It is a tax "for revenue only." [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. I do not care to say anything more about it. I am not sure that we can safely go beyond the reduction we have made on tobacco.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to get the judgment of the Senator in regard to the tobacco tax. The tax was reduced on his motion to 12 cents?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator seems to be very conversant with matters of taxation, and he is, I agree. I ask him now if in his opinion he believes that the tax can be reduced any further with safety?

Mr. BECK. I should rather not go any further at present until we see what we can do in regard to tariff taxation, but I believe that what is now claimed as $50,000,000 for a sinking fund is an absolute absurdity, and we ought not to be acting as if we had to pay $50,000,000 when we can only pay $28,000,000, and we can go $30,000,000 further in the reduction of taxes than Senators think we can.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not discussing the sinking fund.

Mr. BECK. It makes a difference between $40,000,000 and $70,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that, but still we should discuss one thing at a time. I notice every time a Senator gets up here he generally starts off on tobacco and gets on banks, or starts on banks and gets on sugar, or starts on sugar and gets on salt and whisky. I seldom notice an exception to the fact that when a Senator gets up to speak on the proposition before the Senate he gets on something that is not before the Senate. The proposition now is in regard to tobacco, and taking the condition of things as it now exists, the sinking fund and all included, can we afford to reduce the tax on tobacco any further than it was reduced by the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BECK. I will answer that question very fairly. I said I would rather have other things acted on before we reduced the tax on tobacco below the point to which it was reduced by my amendment. I say to the Senate that while the members of the Finance Committee on the other side of the Chamber are insisting that $40,000,000 or $45,000,000 is a sufficient amount to reduce taxation, it is perfectly apparent that they are counting fifty-odd million dollars to be set apart for what they call a sinking fund when $28,000,000 is all that can by any possibility be required, and the taxes may be reduced further with perfect propriety and safety.

If we can reduce taxes $70,000,000 instead of $45,000,000 then we can make tobacco 8 cents instead of 12, and I should prefer to see how far we can go in reducing tariff taxes on many articles before we make that additional reduction. Still, as I have said, I shall vote to make the tax 8 cents and take the chances, though I am sorry the proposition is made until other things are tested, because if we do make it 8 cents it necessarily follows that we shall have to bring the tax on cigars down to $3 to correspond, and we shall have to bring the tax on cigarettes weighing over three pounds per thousand down to 50 cents instead of 75 cents, and cigarettes weighing less than three pounds per thousand to $3 instead of $4. I did not care to make that reduction now, but I do declare that I shall always maintain (though I do jump from one thing to another) that the present army of men we are keeping employed, the number of which has been exhibited to this body, is absolutely disgraceful to any service in the world. Some time ago, when another bill was up, I showed the condition of the number of collectors and employés in one of the Congressional districts in Kentucky. I have the exhibit before me that I made then. Here it is:

Statement showing the amount of tax collected from the following distilleries from July, 1880, to June 30, 1881.

Amount now in warehouse					3,473

Grand total, $8,284.60.

Average while running, 4.78 bushels a day, producing 11.95 gallons, for seventy days per annum. There are now seven storekeeper gaugers employed at $3 per day, making $21, and three general storekeepers, at $4, making $12, their daily pay being $33, to guard 3,473 gallons, or $3,125.70 of tax. The pay of officials for ninety-five days will amount to more than the tax. The amount of tax for the year ending June 30, 1881, is $8,284.60, and the pay of officers per year at present employed is $10,296. When General Clark was asked for the other expenditures in the eighth and ninth districts in Kentucky he called on Mr. F. D. Sewell, chief of the division of revenue agents, for information, and received the following reply:

APRIL 19, 1882.

GENERAL: I find that there has been expended from the appropriation for the discovery of violations of internal-revenue law since June 30, 1878, to the present time, $5,687.78 in the eighth district of Kentucky, and $1,434.27 in the ninth district; total $7,122.05. This has been used entirely for the discovery and seizure of illicit stills and the arrest of offenders. In addition to this quite a large amount has been expended by revenue agents for special employés who have been employed in that State and have devoted a good deal of their time to work in Landram's district.

I am not able, however, to determine the amount expended in this way. It would be safe to put it at not less than $1,000; probably $1,500 is nearer the correct amount.

Respectfully,

F. D. SEWELL,
Chief Division of Revenue Agents.

General W. T. CLARK, Chief Clerk.

Yet this Republican party of the Senate would not even recommend a proposition authorizing the Commissioner to consolidate these little fragments in one common warehouse where one man could guard it, because it would cut the heads off a swarm of political bummers who pay them 2 per cent. and who influence elections.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, while I defer very largely to the judgment of others, I am not one of those who are anxious to see any reduction of taxation. I do not feel anxious for the passage of this bill, either as it came from the House or as it may be amended by the Senate. I believe that there is slight danger of any surplus revenue beyond the actual wants of the country. I think taxation is now so adjusted that its collection is hardly perceptible, that its burden is scarcely felt. I think that the people of the United States, but for the advertisement of the debates in Congress, would hardly be aware that they were paying taxes at all.

Whatever is now imposed in the way of national taxation falls upon the luxuries and vices, and those things which are not the necessaries of life. Yet we are not in the receipt of a revenue which is beyond the real necessities of the country itself, either now or prospectively. I believe that a surplus of $100,000,000, or $150,000,000, or $200,000,000, or $300,000,000 could be most beneficially expended in increased internal improvements of the country and in large national expenditures for the benefit of the country now and in the long hereafter.

I think it would be better that we should go from this session leaving the laws relative to taxation and revenue, either the customs laws or the internal-revenue laws, entirely unmodified and to the tariff commission itself, even if the legislation which may follow upon its report should result in no great reduction of taxation, than that any other result should be arrived at.

If now we go further than we already have gone and insert a provision in the bill diminishing our revenue some six or twelve millions of dollars further upon the single article of tobacco, it is perfectly evident to my mind that we shall soon find ourselves in national embarrassments for the want of a sufficient revenue.

I think those Senators on this floor and those citizens of this country who take an interest in the initiation and in the practical carrying out of great measures bearing upon the education of the people of this country, would do well to pause and consider whether by insisting upon a reduction still further of the revenues of the country they do not entirely preclude the possibility of anything like national aid to the cause of common-school education. That is a subject which has not been discussed in this Congress. It has been discussed in this country, and very earnestly and seriously, and when Senators and members of the House of Representatives after going home reassemble at the next session they will find behind them an intense and nationally developed sentiment demanding legislation in this direction, and demanding appropriations not by thousands, but by millions for the education of the people of this country.

I make no invidious allusion to any particular section of this country in what I say, for the demand for national aid, the necessity for national aid, is as great at the self-righteous North as it is in what we are accustomed to call the illiterate South. The tendencies in this direction to-day are as evil and as hurtful north of what is known as Mason and Dixon's line as they are south of it.

In the House of Representatives there is a pending bill, moved unanimously by the Committee on Education in that body, which proposes an appropriation of $10,000,000 to be distributed upon the basis of illiteracy throughout the entire country. That is not taken into account in any of our propositions to reduce the revenues of the country. We have a bill pending here in the Senate which will appropriate, if it passes, $15,000,000 for the same purpose, and it is but a mere pittance. The honorable Senator on my left [Mr. LOGAN] has introduced a bill which should and which will immortalize him, although it is so extravagant, as many think, in its terms that in some directions there is a disposition to hoot at it, because it proposes to appropriate to the salvation of the Republic $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, that is too small a sum for the necessities of this country, as they are demonstrated to-day by the eternal and undeniable figures of the census, the statistics for collecting and obtaining which we have paid $5,000,000.

The men who take an interest in this subject have to elect to-day whether they will so reduce the revenues of the country that the amelioration of the condition of our people in the direction of their illiteracy now or prospectively is entirely out of the question or whether they will leave our revenue and our means of revenue intact.

It is better to kill this bill. It is a bill that ought never to have originated. It is a bill that should die to-night, and the tendency of the debate and of the amendments which are being attached to it is such that for one I have no hesitation in saying that if we pass another inch in this direction, so far as my vote can contribute to the destruction of this measure it most certainly shall do so.

My honorable friend from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE,] who knows the interest that I personally take in the cause of education in his own State, and in whose political fortunes I feel as great an interest, as he knows, as does any man outside of the borders of the noble old Commonwealth which he so gloriously represents here, must decide to-day, and so must those who have the cause of education at heart, whether they will destroy the prospect of the education of their people in order that they may get a little more extensive market for their tobacco; and also whether they will initiate a course of legislation which, if it extend to tobacco, is inevitably and logically very soon to apply to the other great source of our revenue, and that is the alcoholic production of the country.

Mr. President, there are some other things in this country which are important besides the reduction of taxes upon our vices and our luxuries. Nobody rises here to say that the tax of the present day is not substantially imposed upon those two things, and both interests are sufficiently wealthy and both sufficiently powerful to bear not only the taxation now imposed upon them but a very much greater degree of it. For one, I am in favor of keeping the laws as they are, and if it will produce a greater revenue I would impose still more taxation, and I would impose taxation upon the necessaries of life if it should be found that we could not get the needful revenues in any other direction for the purpose of insuring the proper education and development of our people.

That is a thing we are not likely to do under our State system. Aid from the national Government is indispensable, and aid from the national Government is as logical and as proper a thing to give to our people, so that the national citizen may be educated to be competent to exercise the functions of sovereignty in his national capacity as that he may be able to perform the same functions as the citizen of a State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE.]

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Vermont does not desire to complete the consideration——

Mr. MORRILL. I wish the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to move to adjourn, unless the Senator from Vermont expects to complete the bill to-night.

Mr. MORRILL. I want the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I predicted when this discussion began that some of our friends on the other side would get sick of the reduction of taxation, and I am very sorry to see that the Senator from New Hampshire is ailing a good deal. Therefore——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will permit me to say that I was sick from the beginning, and have given my reasons.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not aware of the fact that the Senator was complaining.

Mr. BLAIR. I was a little sick from the beginning. As I said, I deferred to the judgment of others.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry to see the Senator in such a condition of health and, therefore, I was going to move to adjourn in order that the Senator might have Sunday in which to recover his health, and renew the discussion on Monday.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us take the vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure my other friend from New Hampshire is not getting sick.

Mr. ROLLINS. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to hear that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to submit to the Senator from Vermont that it is not well to continue discussion on this bill any longer to-day. We have been here since eleven o'clock; it is now nearly six; the amendment is a very serious one, and it has been made much more so by the amendment adopted by the Senate by a majority I believe of but one or two votes, to adopt which in my judgment shakes at the whole system of tobacco taxation. It is to my mind one to repeal the restriction upon the sale of leaf tobacco by the grower and leave him free, without Government inspection and without safeguard, to sell his tobacco to whom he pleases to an amount equal to $100, and it is in my judgment to perform a task upon your revenue that you would upon a barrel of whisky if you bored a gimlet-hole in it.

I think it very important that the question of tobacco taxation should be agreed upon fairly and soundly, whether you are to abandon it or not. One fact is certain, it brought $47,000,000 into the Treasury last year, and as the Senator from Ohio has said, it is one of those articles that every government has selected as the subject of especial taxation.

It is not worth while to resolve to do a thing and then vote so as to make it impossible. If you intend upon this agricultural product to lay a duty of 8 cents a pound, which is more than 100 per cent. ad valorem, more than double the value of the property which you tax, and which is produced all over the country, you must cast around it those safeguards that common experience tells you are necessary to get your tax; otherwise certainly the best way is to abandon it. You will have all your inquisition, you will have all your suits, you will have all the distress to the people that will come from attempting to collect a tax which yet your laws enable them successfully to evade. If you want a tax like this, you have got to impose restrictions upon the use by the people of their property, and what I may call the natural use of their property. They cannot buy and sell and deal in this thing just as if it were not subject to a tax. You begin by imposing your regulation upon manufacturers, and you continue it to producers and to sellers and peddlers, and all these intermediate persons; and if you wish to collect this tax you have got to continue those restrictions.

Yet to-day by a vote the Senate has agreed to allow the farmer to sell to whom he pleases to the amount of $100. What is the use of talking of the amount of $100? He may sell just as much as he pleases in small quantities and you cannot detect it, you cannot prevent it. If you try by machinery to follow that man up in his every day dealings you will increase the inquisitorial features of your law so painfully that you will produce trouble, and you will bring all sorts of poor people into your courts; and so instead of helping them you will hurt them. That will be just the result of that. I believe I see it as plainly as I see the faces of Senators before me.

I would have been willing without that amendment to put the tax at 8 cents a pound, not without hesitation, but still I would have put it at 8 cents a pound for the purpose of diminishing the premium upon evasion which a high tax always creates. But if you mean to get revenue say so, and pass laws for it, and pass the necessary restrictions for it, but do not pass the law with one hand and then throw those restrictions off.

I say to the Senator from Vermont that I wish he would move that the Senate do now adjourn. I should like to vote correctly on this subject. I did want to vote for 8 cents a pound originally, and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] would have put his amendment at 8 cents a pound if he had not been informed that he would gain votes by putting it at 12 cents. That was his view originally and mine, but in the mean time amendments have been put on which I think make it very doubtful whether we shall get a revenue.

I suggest to the honorable Senator from Vermont that he move an adjournment, and I hope he will do so. I do not want to assume the control of business in this body, but it is reasonable that we should adjourn. It is now six o'clock, and I submit to my friend from Vermont that it will not prolong the debate on this bill to have an adjournment now, and I do not think it will expedite the passage of the bill to continue the debate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read in part.

On motion of Mr. BUCK, by unanimous consent the further reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal will be considered as approved.

There was no objection.

CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS BY SEA.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

Mr. GUENTHER. The bill is of some length. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. While I favor this bill I do not consider it would be at all safe to pass any bill through the House without its being read.

Mr. GUENTHER. I withdraw, then, my request that the reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Any member is entitled to have a bill or other proposition read upon which the House is to vote.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Commerce was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for the master of a steamship or other vessel whereon emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country or dominion (ports and places in foreign territory contiguous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage; that is to say, in a steamship the compartments or spaces, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow for each and every passenger carried or brought therein one hundred cubic feet, if the compartment or space is located on the main deck or on the first deck next below the main deck of the vessel, [or in a poop or deck-house constructed on the main deck of the vessel,] and one hundred and twenty cubic feet for each passenger carried or brought therein if the compartment or space is located on the second deck below the main deck of the vessel; and it shall not be lawful to carry or bring passengers on any deck other than the [two] decks above mentioned, [and in the aforesaid poop or deck-houses.] And in sailing-vessels such passengers shall be carried or brought only on the deck (not being an orlop deck) that is next below the [uppermost] main deck of the vessel, or in a poop or deck-house constructed on the main deck; and the compartment or space, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow one hundred and ten cubic feet for each and every passenger brought therein. And such passengers shall not be carried or brought in any between-decks, nor in any compartment, space, poop, or deck-house, the [clear] height of which from deck to deck is less than six feet, [and in the cabin or upper decks not less than six feet six inches.] In computing the number of such passengers carried or brought in any vessel, children under one year of age shall not be included, and two children between one and eight years of age shall be counted as one passenger; and any person brought in such vessel who shall have been during the voyage taken from any other vessel wrecked or in distress on the high seas, or have been picked up at sea from any boat, raft, or otherwise, shall not be included in such computation. The master of a vessel coming to a port or place in the United States in violation of either of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and if the number of passengers other than cabin passengers carried or brought in the vessel, or in any compartment, space, poop, or deck-house thereof, is greater than the number allowed to be carried or brought therein, respectively, as hereinbefore prescribed, the said master shall be fined $50 for each and every passenger in excess of the proper number, and may also be imprisoned not exceeding six months.

SEC. 2. That in every such steamship or other vessel there shall be a sufficient number of berths for the proper accommodation, as hereinafter provided, of all such passengers. There shall not be on any deck nor in any compartment or space occupied by such passengers more than two tiers of berths. The berths shall be properly constructed, and be separated from each other by partitions, as berths ordinarily are separated, and each berth shall be at least two feet in width and six feet in length; and the interval between the floor or lowest part of the lower tier of berths and the deck beneath them shall not be less than six inches, nor the interval between each tier of berths, and the interval between the uppermost tier and the deck above it, less than two feet six inches; and each berth shall be occupied by not more than one passenger over eight years of age; but double berths of twice the above-mentioned width may be provided, each double berth to be occupied by no more and by none other than two women, or by one woman and two children under the age of eight years, or by husband and wife, or by a man and two of his own children under the age of eight years, or by two men personally acquainted with each other. All the male passengers upward of fourteen years of age who do not occupy berths with their wives shall be berthed in the forepart of the vessel, in a compartment divided off from the space or spaces appropriated to the other passengers by a substantial and well-secured bulkhead; and unmarried female passengers shall be berthed in a compartment separated from the spaces occupied by other passengers by a substantial and well-constructed bulkhead, the opening or communication from which to an adjoining passenger space shall be so constructed that it can be closed and secured. Families, however, shall not be separated except with their consent. Each berth shall be numbered serially, on the outside berth-board, according to the number of passengers that may lawfully occupy the berth; and the berths occupied by such passengers shall not be removed or taken down until [they have been inspected by a customs officer as hereinafter provided] the expiration of twelve hours from the time of entry, unless previously inspected within a shorter period. For any violation of either of the provisions of this section the master of the vessel shall be liable to a fine of $5 for each passenger carried or brought on the vessel.

SEC. 3. That every such steamship or other vessel shall have adequate provision for affording light and air to the passenger decks and to the compartments and spaces occupied by such passengers, and with adequate means and appliances for ventilating the said compartments and spaces. To compartments having sufficient space for fifty or more of such passengers at least two ventilators, each not less than twelve inches in diameter, shall be provided, one of which ventilators shall be inserted in the forward part of the compartment, and the other in the after part thereof, and shall be so constructed as to ventilate the compartment; and additional ventilators shall be provided for each compartment in the proportion of two ventilators for each additional fifty of such passengers carried or brought in the compartment. All ventilators shall be carried at least six feet above the uppermost deck of the vessel, and shall be of the most approved form and construction. In any steamship the ventilating apparatus provided, or any method of ventilation adopted thereon, which has been approved by proper emigration officers at the port or place from which said vessel was cleared, shall be deemed a compliance with the foregoing provisions; and in all vessels carrying or bringing such passengers there shall be properly constructed hatchways over the compartments or spaces occupied by such passengers, which hatchways shall be properly covered with houses or [boody] booby hatches, and the combings or sills of which shall rise at least [one foot] six inches above the deck; [and the said houses shall have a door on each side, so constructed as to afford the greatest amount of light and air and of protecting from wet that the case will admit;] and there shall be proper companion-ways, or ladders from each hatchway leading to the compartments or spaces occupied by such passengers; and the said companion-ways or ladders shall be securely constructed, and be provided with hand-rails or strong rope, and, when the weather will permit, such passengers shall have the [free and unimpeded] use [of the whole] of each hatchway situated over the compartments or spaces appropriated to their use; and every vessel carrying or bringing such passengers shall have a properly located and constructed [camboose] caboose and cooking range, or other cooking apparatus, the dimensions and capacity of which shall be sufficient to provide for properly cooking and preparing the food of all such passengers. In every vessel carrying or bringing such passengers there shall be at least two water-closets or privies, and an additional water-closet or privy for every one hundred male passengers on board, for the exclusive use of such male passengers, and an additional water-closet or privy for every fifty female passengers on board, for the exclusive use of the female passengers and young children on board. The aforesaid water-closets and privies shall be properly inclosed and located on each side of the vessel, and shall be separated from passengers' spaces by substantial and properly constructed partitions or bulkheads; and the water-closets and privies shall be kept and maintained in a serviceable and cleanly condition throughout the voyage. For any violation of either of the provisions of this section, or for any neglect to conform to the requirements thereof, the master of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $250.

SEC. 4. [That every such steamship or other vessel shall have on board during the voyage, properly stored and secured, a supply of good and wholesome food, provisions, and water sufficient to provide for the daily distribution to each of such passengers while on board the vessel an allowance of food and provisions equal, for the first twenty days of the voyage, in value to least fifty cents, United States money, per head, and to be of good and wholesome character and of sufficient quantity, and to be served on tables, with seats around, as now is customary in the second cabin of the transatlantic steamships, the computations of the fifty cents value to be made in bulk at the rate of fifty dollars for every hundred passengers. Mothers] An allowance of good, wholesome, and proper food, with a reasonable quantity of fresh provisions, which food shall be equal in value to one and a half navy rations of the United States, and of fresh water not less than four quarts per day shall be furnished each of such passengers. Three meals shall be served daily, at regular and stated hours, of which hours sufficient notice shall be given. If any such passengers shall at any time during the voyage be put on short allowance for food or water, the master of the vessel shall pay to each passenger three dollars for each and every day the passenger may have been put on short allowance, except in case of accidents, where the captain is obliged to put the passengers on short allowance. Mothers with infants and young children shall be furnished the necessary quantity of wholesome milk or condensed milk for the sustenance of the latter. Tables and seats shall be provided for the use of passengers at regular meals. [On sailing-vessels and on steamships, for the time after the first twenty days of the voyage, an allowance of food and provisions equal in quality and quantity to a navy ration of the United States, and of water not less than three quarts per day, shall be furnished each of such passengers. Three meals shall be served daily, at regular and stated hours, of which hours sufficient notice shall be given. If any such passenger shall, at any time during the voyage, be put upon short allowance of food or water, the master of the vessel shall pay to such passenger $3 for each and every day the passenger may have been put on short allowance, except in cases of accidents where the captain is obliged to put the passengers on short allowance.] And for every willful violation of any of the provisions of this section the master of the vessel shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not more than $500, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months. The enforcement of this penalty, however, shall not affect the civil responsibility of the master and owners of the vessel to such passengers as may have suffered from any negligence, breach of contract, or default on the part of such master and owners.

SEC. 5. That in every such steamship or other vessel there shall be properly built and secured, or divided off from other spaces, two compartments or spaces to be used exclusively as hospitals for such passengers, one for men and the other for women. The hospitals shall be located in a [deck house constructed on the main deck or on the deck next below the uppermost deck] space below the deck next below the main deck of the vessel, [and not elsewhere.] The hospital spaces shall in no case be less than in the proportion of eighteen clear superficial feet for every fifty such passengers who are carried or brought on the vessel, and such hospitals shall be supplied with proper beds, bedding, and utensils, and be kept so [filled and] supplied throughout the voyage. And every steamship or other vessel carrying or bringing emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, exceeding fifty in number, shall carry a duly qualified and competent surgeon or medical practitioner, who shall be rated as such in the ship's articles, and who shall be provided with surgical instruments, medical comforts, and medicines proper and necessary for diseases and accidents incident to sea-voyages, and for the proper medical treatment of such passengers during the voyage, and with such articles of food and nourishment as may be proper and necessary for preserving the health of infants and young children; and the services of such surgeon or medical practitioner shall be promptly given, in any case of sickness or disease, to any of the passengers or to any infant or young child of any such passengers who may need his services. For a violation of either of the provisions of this section the master of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $250.

SEC. 6. That the master of every such steamship or other vessel is authorized to maintain good discipline and such habits of cleanliness among such passengers as will tend to the preservation and promotion of health, and to that end he shall cause such regulations as he may adopt for such purpose to be posted up on board the vessel, in a place or places accessible to such passengers, and shall keep the same so posted up during the voyage. The said master shall cause the compartments and spaces provided for, or occupied by, such passengers to be kept at all times in a clean and healthy condition, and to be, as often as may be necessary, disinfected with chloride of lime, or by some other equally efficient disinfectant. Whenever the state of the weather will permit, such passengers and their bedding shall be mustered on deck, and a clear and sufficient space on the [uppermost] main or any upper deck of the vessel shall be set apart, and so kept, for the use and exercise of such passengers during the voyage. For each neglect or violation of any of the provisions of this section the master of the vessel shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $250.

SEC. 7. That neither the officers, seamen, nor other persons employed on any such steamship or other vessel shall visit or frequent any part of the vessel provided or assigned to the use of such passengers, except by the direction or permission of the master of such vessel first made or given for such purpose; and every officer, seaman, or other person employed on board of such vessel who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be fined not exceeding $100 and be imprisoned not exceeding twenty days, for each violation; and the master of such vessel who directs or permits any officer, seaman, or other person employed on board the vessel to visit or frequent any part of the vessel provided for or assigned to the use of such passengers, or the compartments or spaces occupied by such passengers, except for the purpose of doing or performing some necessary act or duty as an officer, seaman, or other person employed on board of the vessel, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be fined not more than $100 for each time he directs or permits the provisions of this section to be violated. A copy of this section, written or printed in the language or principal languages of the passengers on board, shall, by or under the direction of the master of the vessel, be posted in a conspicuous place on the forecastle and in the several parts of the vessel provided and assigned for the use of such passengers, and in each compartment or space occupied by such passengers, and the same shall be kept so posted during the voyage; and if the said master neglects so to do he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100.

SEC. 8. That it shall not be lawful to take, carry, or have on board of any such steamship or other vessel any nitro-glycerine, dynamite, or any other explosive article or compound, nor any vitriol or like acids, nor gunpowder, except for the ship's use, nor any article or number of articles, whether as cargo or ballast, which, by reason of the nature or quantity or mode of storage thereof, shall, either singly or collectively, be likely to endanger the health or lives of the passengers or the safety of the vessel; and horses, cattle, or other animals taken on board of or brought in any such vessel shall not be carried on any deck below the deck on which passengers are berthed, nor in any compartment in which passengers are berthed, nor in any adjoining compartment, except in a vessel built of iron and of which the compartments are divided off by water-tight bulk-heads extending to the upper deck. For every violation of any of the provisions of this section the master of the vessel shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 and be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year.

SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful for the master of any such steamship or other vessel, not in distress, after the arrival of the vessel within any collection district of the United States, to allow any person or persons, except a pilot, officer of the customs, or health officer, agents of the vessel, and consuls, to come on board of the vessel, or to leave the vessel, until the vessel has been taken in charge by an officer of the customs, nor, after charge so taken, without leave of such officer, until all the passengers, with their baggage, have been duly landed from the vessel; and on the arrival of any such steamship or other vessel within any collection district of the United States, the master thereof shall deliver to the officer of customs who first comes on board the vessel and makes demand therefor a correct list, signed by the master, of all the passengers taken on board the vessel at any foreign port or place, specifying separately the names of the cabin passengers, their age, sex, calling, and the country of which they are citizens, and the number of pieces of baggage belonging to each passenger, and also the name, age, sex, calling, and native country of each emigrant passenger, or passengers other than cabin passengers, and their intended destination or location, and the number of pieces of baggage belonging to each passenger, and also the location of the compartment or space occupied by each of such passengers during the voyage; and if any of such passengers died on the voyage, the said list shall specify the name, age, and cause of death of each deceased passenger; and a duplicate of the aforesaid list of passengers, verified by the oath of the master, shall, with the manifest of the cargo, be delivered by the master to the collector of customs on the entry of the vessel. For a violation of either of the provisions of this section, or for permitting or neglecting to prevent a violation thereof, the master of the vessel shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 10. That in case there shall have occurred on board any such steamship or other vessel any death among such passengers during the voyage, the master or consignees of the vessel shall, within forty-eight hours after the arrival of the vessel within a collection district of the United States, or within twenty-four hours after the entry of the vessel, pay to the collector of customs of such district the sum of $10 for each and every such passenger above the age of eight years who shall have died on the voyage by natural disease; and the master or consignees of any vessel who neglect or refuse to pay to such collector, within the times hereinbefore prescribed, the sums of money aforesaid, shall be liable to a penalty of $50 in addition to the sum required to be paid as aforesaid for each passenger whose death occurred on the voyage. All sums of money paid to any collector under the provisions of this section shall be by him paid into the Treasury of the United States in such manner and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 11. That the collector of customs of the collection district within which, or the surveyor of the port at which, any such steamship or other vessel arrives, shall direct an inspector or other officer of the customs to make an examination of the vessel, and to admeasure the compartments or spaces occupied by the emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, during the voyage; and such measurement shall be made in the manner provided by law for admeasuring vessels for tonnage; and to compare the number of such passengers found on board with the list of such passengers furnished by the master to the customs officer; and the said inspector or other officer shall make a report to the aforesaid collector or surveyor, stating the port of departure, the time of sailing, the length of the voyage, the ventilation, the number of such passengers on board the vessel, and their native country, respectively; the cubic quantity of each compartment or space, and the number of berths and passengers in each space; the kind and quality of the food furnished to such passengers on the voyage; the number of deaths, and the age and sex of those who died during the voyage, and of what disease; and in case there was any unusual sickness or mortality during the voyage, to report whether the same was caused by any neglect or violation of the provisions of this act, or by the want of proper care against disease by the master or owners of the vessel; and the said reports shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury at such times and in such manner as he shall direct.

SEC. 12. That the provisions of this act shall apply to every steamship or other vessel whereon emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, are taken on board at a port or place in the United States for conveyance to any port or place in a foreign country except foreign territory contiguous to the United States, and shall also apply to any vessel whereon such passengers are taken on board at any port or place of the United States on the Atlantic Ocean or its tributaries for conveyance to a port or place on the Pacific Ocean or its tributaries, or vice versa; and whether the voyage of said vessel is to be continuous from port to port or such passengers are to be conveyed from port to port in part by the way of any overland route through Mexico or Central America; and the said collector of customs may direct an examination of the vessel to be made by an inspector or other officer of the customs, who shall make the examination and report whether the provisions of this act have been complied with in respect to such vessel, and the said collector is authorized to withhold the clearance of such vessel until the coming in of such report; and if the said report shall show that any of the provisions of this act have not been complied with, the collector is authorized and directed to withhold the clearance of such vessel until the said provisions are complied with; and if any such vessel leaves the aforesaid port or place without having been duly cleared by the collector of customs, the master shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be fined not exceeding $1,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding one year, and the vessel shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture.

SEC. 13. That the amount of the several fines and penalties imposed by any section of this act upon the master of any steamship or other vessel carrying or bringing emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, for any violation of the provisions of this act, shall be liens upon such vessel, and such vessel may be libeled therefor in any circuit or district court of the United States where such vessel shall arrive or depart.

SEC. 14. That this act shall come into operation and take effect ninety days after the passage of this act; and sections 4252 to 4277, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, from and after said date, repealed; and this act may be cited for all purposes as "The passenger act, 1882."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GUENTHER. I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill as it came from the printer this morning omits the word "not" between the word "space" and the word "below," in line 7 of section 5 of the printed bill. I ask that the word "not" be there inserted, so that it will read "the hospitals shall be located in a space not below the deck next below the main deck of the vessel."

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Is this bill now in a form satisfactory to the steamship companies?

Mr. GUENTHER. Satisfactory to the better class and to the friends of the bill.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. If it is such a bill as the steamship companies want, why pass any bill at all? They would do the same thing now.

Mr. GUENTHER. It is not a bill which the steamboat companies want.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object to the steamboat companies preparing such bills as they desire for us to pass.

Mr. GUENTHER. That is not the case.

Mr. DEUSTER. I desire to say that this is not a bill shaped by the steamboat companies, but their representatives were present at the meeting of the committee and acquiesced in what the committee had done; they will no longer fight the bill. That is all; it is not the bill of the steamboat companies.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I only wanted to know.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GUENTHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask consent——

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to waive the call for a moment. I think if he will hear me he will not insist upon it.

Mr. KASSON. I am charged with a duty under the regular order; and as I shall be called out soon I must ask for it early. If it will take only five minutes I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEILL. And let me have two or three minutes after that.

SAINT TAMMANY WATER WORKS COMPANY, NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States, and to put the same on its passage at this time. The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I reserve the right to object until the bill is read.

Mr. ELLIS. The object of the bill——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let the bill be read.

Mr. ELLIS. Let me talk first. The object of the bill is to give right of way to a company over the lands and waters of the United States for the purpose of laying pipes and aqueducts to give the city of New Orleans a supply of pure, healthy water. It will not cost the Government a dollar, and I know no one will object to it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Davidson B. Penn, of New Orleans, Louisiana, and his associates, under the name and style of the "Crescent City Aqueduct and Water Works Company," or such other style as they may adopt, be, and are hereby, granted the right of way to lay conduits, pipes, arches, and aqueducts under the waters of Lake Pontchartrain to connect its northern shores with the city of New Orleans, and over and under any of the public waters or lands of the United States between New Orleans and said shore of said lake: Provided, That every part of such pipes, aqueducts, or other constructions shall be at least ten feet below the surface of said waters at mean low tide: Provided also, That if at any time the constructions of said company shall in any way obstruct or interfere with the free and safe navigation of any of said waters, such constructions shall be removed or changed by the company upon notification by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering at this time the bill which has been read?

There was no objection, and the House proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Commerce was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. In order to perfect the text, I move to strike out the words "Crescent City Aqueduct and" and to substitute therefor the words "Saint Tammany;" so that it will read, "Under the name and style of the Saint Tammany Water Works Company." That is the name which has been chosen by the corporation.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] would tell us whether there are any lands of the United States to be crossed by this company, except those covered by water?

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think there are any; but I put that in from abundant caution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It does not cross any arsenal grounds or hospital grounds, or anything of that kind?

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think it touches a foot of the public domain; but not being absolutely certain I put in those words out of caution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I now call for the regular order, only remarking that these same unanimous consents can be asked for at the close of the morning hour provided by the new rule adopted yesterday.

Mr. O'NEILL. Which rule shuts out everything by unanimous consent.

Mr. POUND. Only for the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which under the special rule adopted yesterday is the call of committees in their order for the purpose of calling up bills and resolutions for consideration. Under the rule the Chair will recognize one person from each committee to call up business. The morning hour will begin at eighteen minutes before twelve o'clock.

MATERIALS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS.

Mr. KASSON. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask that the bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sailing vessels for foreign account be now taken from the House Calendar for consideration at this time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, reserving my right under the rule to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is whether this bill comes before the House by express direction of a committee in session, a quorum being present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes it does.

Mr. KASSON. The direction was given this morning without objection at a meeting of the Committee on Ways and Means, a quorum being present.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. With that construction of the rule I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gives no construction to the rule except to say that when members state that they are authorized by their committee to call up certain business the Chair will take the word of such members.

Mr. REED. And it will be at the option of any member of the House to inquire whether it has been so authorized by a committee; and unless the member in his place states that he has been directly so authorized it will not be admissible under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never undertakes to question what a member states about a matter of this sort. If members choose to raise the question, it is their right, not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. As we are just beginning action under this new rule, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the practice which will be observed by the Chair in reference to objections. Under the rule a measure is to be considered, as I understand, unless objected to by more than three members. Now, what is the time to make objection—before the bill is read?

The SPEAKER. Members are not expected to object until they know what the measure is. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sail vessels for foreign account.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3020 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended by adding the following, to come in at the end of the last line of said section: "Steam and sail vessels built for foreign account, of domestic and imported materials, shall be entitled to the benefit of the rate of drawback on the imported materials as provided in the preceding section.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. If this bill should now come before the House in its present form without objection, and should be amended so as to become objectionable, will the right of objection remain in respect to the amended bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not, as the Chair thinks.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I object.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask whether there is a report from the Committee on Ways and Means on this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBESON. As this bill may be amended so as to bring in the whole tariff question, I object.

Mr. MORRISON. One objection is not sufficient.

Mr. ROBESON. I object; if no one else does so I cannot help it. The Chair has ruled that after the bill is before the House any amendment may come in and be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that gentlemen desiring to object will rise.

Mr. KASSON. Before that is done, I suggest that in accordance with the practice the report may be read, the right to object being reserved till after the reading.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that the report may be read as a part of the consideration of the measure. The question whether it will be considered is first to be determined. A sufficient number of members not having risen to object, the bill is before the House.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask that the report may be read under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, provided the reading does not occupy more than five minutes.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sail vessels for foreign account, submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to extend to vessels built in the United States on foreign account, partly of domestic and partly of imported materials, the same drawback that is allowed under section 3019 of the Revised Statutes on manufactured articles constructed wholly of imported materials. Under sections 3019 and 3020 of the Revised Statutes, ship-builders of the United States can import all the materials used in the construction of vessels, and, when such vessels are exported, can obtain drawback equal to the amount of duty paid on the materials used in construction, less 10 per cent. But if a single dollar's worth of domestic materials be employed in conjunction with imported materials then no drawback can be allowed. The increasing demand from abroad for American-built vessels of a certain class makes it necessary to remove this discrimination in order that American ship-builders may be placed on an equality with their foreign competitors, and in order that they may be enabled to accept orders for building vessels on foreign account.

A further reason controlling the opinion of your committee is found in the fact that the existing law discourages the use of American material by making its use an occasion for depriving ship-builders of the drawback which is allowed when no domestic materials are used. There is no dispute that a sound economic policy requires us to give employment to our labor in the largest degree for foreign account. As this bill embraces no new principle of legislation, and is simply an enlargement of the application of the principle established in the sections of law referred to, your committee report back the bill with the recommendation that it pass, with an amendment of the title so that the same shall read: "A bill to allow drawback on foreign material used in connection with domestic materials in the construction of steam and sail vessels for foreign account."

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, the report I think explains the very simple object of this bill. For the benefit of those gentlemen who did not attend to the reading, I have only to say that under our existing laws if a vessel is built entirely of foreign materials a drawback of the duty on those materials, less 10 per cent., is allowed; but if there are some domestic materials used in the construction of the vessel the benefit of the drawback is lost.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman will pardon me. I wish to ask whether this bill is still subject to objection? I understood the gentleman to ask that the report be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not now subject to objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. The right to object was reserved by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. ROBESON. I understand, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KASSON. I beg to proceed with my statement.

Mr. ROBESON. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to ask that the report be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. ROBESON. Did not the gentleman so ask?

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the bill was before the House prior to the reading of the report.

Mr. KASSON. I beg to make my statement, as I have the floor for that purpose under the rule.

Mr. O'NEILL. It was distinctly announced that the right to object was reserved pending the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize but one gentleman at a time. The gentleman from Iowa is on the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask that an amendment be read.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me my right to the floor?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. I beg to state to my friend from Illinois and to the House that the simple object of this bill is to further the doing of work for foreign countries by allowing the use of domestic materials without loss of the drawback which the present law allows when a vessel is built entirely of foreign materials. Under the present law, if in the construction of a steamship built for foreign account $10,000 worth of domestic materials are used, the benefit of the drawback which would be allowed if all the materials were foreign is lost.

The ship-builders represented more particularly by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. MARTIN,] who introduced this bill, state that they have a growing business of this sort for the construction of a certain class of vessels which our ship-yards are turning out for foreign account with very considerable speed; and this business they can do to greater advantage and with greater security against the competition of foreign ship-yards, if all the domestic materials which can be used more cheaply than foreign materials are allowed to be used without the loss of the drawback on the foreign materials.

It does not in any respect change the principle of the law of drawback. It only limits the amount of drawback to be required by that proportion of domestic materials used. And I appeal to the patriotism of gentlemen on both sides who wish to encourage so useful a work as this, for which we are paid by foreign money and which applies to foreign account alone, to allow that bill to pass and increase the employment of our ship-yards and the labor applied to that class of business. I have to add that I believe the Committee on Ways and Means were unanimous. I know of no objection on their part, and with that statement I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill, in line 6, by inserting the word "domestic" between the word "foreign" and "account." I wish the Clerk to take cognizance of it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. TUCKER. I do. Now, the purpose of the amendment is, and I call the attention of my friend from Iowa to it——

Mr. KENNA. Let us have order, so the gentleman can be heard.

The SPEAKER. The House is in order and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. TUCKER. The purpose of the amendment is this: the bill if it passes will enable the foreign ship-owner to have a vessel built in an American ship-yard of material cheapened, if of foreign product, by having a drawback on those materials. But if I want to get a ship built in the same ship-yard to sail under an American register and foreign materials are used, I get no drawback. So it will cost me more as an owner of a ship sailing under the American flag than it will the owner of a foreign ship. In the interest of all shippers of this country, for the benefit of the shipping interest, I ask we be allowed to buy our ships as cheaply as the foreigner can buy them or have them constructed in our own ship-yards. For that purpose I have moved to insert the word "domestic" between the word "foreign" and the word "account," so that an American shipper can get a ship built in Delaware as cheaply as a foreigner can get it built there.

Mr. SCALES. That is to put our shippers on an equality with foreign shippers in getting ships built in the State of Delaware.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, that is it exactly. It is in the interest of the great shipping interest of the country. Gentlemen are complaining our carrying trade is going away from our shippers. Here is a bill which enables the foreigner, who has an advantage of us already, to get a cheaper ship in an American ship-yard than an American shipper can have a ship built in the same yard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. It is in effect a premium to the British flag over the American flag.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. One amendment is already pending.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My amendment is in the nature of an additional section to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not in order at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As soon as it is in order I wish to offer it.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] and if the House will indulge me I will take a few moments to state the reason why it should be adopted. There are, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, a large number of ship-yards upon our great inland seas, employing hundreds and thousands of people, and they would like, in behalf of their interests, to have just such an amendment inserted in this bill as the one suggested by the gentleman from Virginia. I hope the House will therefore seriously consider whether it will insert the word "domestic" alongside of the word "foreign," so that our people shall stand upon an equal footing with foreigners desiring ships built.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, is there any time left for debate?

The SPEAKER. Yes, one minute.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to say, then, in a single word, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] raises the whole question of free ships, as it is fallaciously termed. If that amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is adopted here in the hurry of a special consideration of a bill unanimously reported from the Ways and Means Committee it will compel every man who believes in the protection of American industries to vote against that bill.

And just one word further. I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that when a unanimous Ways and Means comes in here with a carefully prepared bill to relieve a given interest of the United States, that, rather than see that relief granted, the free-traders and Democrats of the House will attach amendments to it and make it impossible for us to go for it. That is what the amendment means.

Mr. TUCKER rose.

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. ROBESON. Can anybody be heard in opposition to this bill?

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to ask my friend from Kansas——

The SPEAKER. It may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us have the regular order under the new rule. We have adopted it and let us work under it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have sent up an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. It can be offered when it is in order. The Chair has repeatedly told the gentleman his amendment is not now in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why is it not in order?

The SPEAKER. Simply because there is an amendment pending, and the gentleman has informed the Chair he desires to offer his, not as an amendment to the amendment, but as an amendment in the nature of an additional section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to have my rights protected; that is all.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia in the remaining time which I reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has exhausted his time.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask a vote upon the measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask unanimous consent that somebody may be allowed to be heard in opposition to this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 49.

Mr. O'NEILL. No quorum has voted. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. TUCKER as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 23.

Mr. O'NEILL. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is fairly a quorum in the House. I hope that there will be no filibustering by gentlemen on that side on this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask one word of explanation.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not now in order.

Mr. DUNN. I simply wish to ask a question, by consent, for information.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to interrupt the roll-call which has commenced.

Mr. DUNN. I do not well understand the question, and what I desire to ask is simply a parliamentary question as to what the vote is to be taken upon?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to ask a further question. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia or the Chair, if this amendment is not adopted and the bill be passed as reported from the committee, if it is true that that will leave the law in this shape——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. DUNN. That an American ship-owner cannot buy a cheap ship abroad or have it built at home, while a foreigner may do both?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, that is it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary question, but goes to the merits of the bill.

Mr. McCOOK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are we proceeding in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. We are proceeding in the House not as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCOOK. Are we not proceeding under the provisions of the amended rules?

The SPEAKER. We are.

Mr. McCOOK. Does not that require that this hour shall be proceeded with in the morning in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Still we are in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The roll-call cannot be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish to make the statement that I do not understand how, under the provisions of the rule adopted yesterday, we are proceeding in the House and not as in Committee of the Whole, and how the roll can be called under that rule.

The SPEAKER. We are proceeding in the House still. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 12, not voting 182; as follows:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to inquire whether or not a quorum has voted?

The SPEAKER. A quorun has not voted.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then I will not withdraw my vote. I am paired, as announced, with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HUBBELL, reserving the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum.

Several members withdrew their votes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to any member withdrawing his vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been the practice of the House to allow this to be done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If they are not needed to make a quorum I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule of practice does the gentleman object?

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, objected.

The names of members voting were read.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 95 and the nays 12.

Mr. WARD. No quorum.

Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. TUCKER moved that there be a call of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. KENNA called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] says he rises to make a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I think gentlemen, if they will exercise a little patience, will see——

Mr. KENNA. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KASSON. My inquiry is this: this bill having been reported under the new rule, and the hour expiring, as it will, in three minutes——

The SPEAKER. In less than that.

Mr. KASSON. The bill will be treated as unfinished business, as I understand; and if so—and I ask that question of the Chair—if so, does it not block the operation of the rule?

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the gentleman will not obstruct my motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, will state this would go over as the unfinished business of its class in the hour provided for by the special rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair is right. That is the effect of the rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. McCOID. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOID. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] but reserved the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KLOTZ. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCOID. I had risen to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman spoke about a pair.

Mr. McCOID. There was more than that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. McCOID. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] reserving the right to vote to make a quorum. I ask if I can vote now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote cannot be recorded now.

Mr. KENNA. I submit that it makes no difference whether the hour has expired or not. The last vote having disclosed the absence of a quorum the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] must be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard the motion, but will now recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. I rose before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] rose, and before the hour expired, and moved a call of the House; and I understood I was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. A number of gentlemen were at the time insisting upon making parliamentary inquiries and they took precedence. Does the gentleman from Virginia insist on his motion for a call of the House now?

Mr. TUCKER. I do.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. TUCKER. Because the House is not in a condition to lay it on the table.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no objection to a direct vote being taken on the motion. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, and Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. I think nothing will be gained by that. This will come up to-morrow as unfinished business in the hour assigned by the new rule.

The SPEAKER. It certainly cannot come up again to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist on the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. We want to know who were here to do business and did not vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered, thirty-three members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 79, not voting 137; as follows:

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to dispense with the reading of the names of those voting.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CURTIN. I have voted, although I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. THOMPSON;] but the pair was made with the reservation of the right to vote to make a quorum.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KING. I desire to state that for some time past I was paired with Hon. Mr. SHERWIN, of Illinois. He returned here without my being aware of it, and for several days I have not been voting.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training-schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4174) for the erection of a public building at Marquette, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4178) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the amendments of the Senate, except the forty-seventh amendment, further insisted upon its amendment disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBESON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion of Mr. BINGHAM was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent to submit a petition, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Printed without the names?

Mr. BELMONT. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read.

The petition was read, as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, who are interested in the shipping of the United States, believe such shipping to be of itself an important factor in the welfare of the nation, and entertain the full conviction that the foreign trade of the country is closely related to the industries of agriculture and manufacture, and that the present decline of United States tonnage has a depressing influence upon all interests of the country, besides the depriving of employment a large class of citizens who would seek the sea for a livelihood. They also believe that a revival of the interest can be facilitated by wise changes in existing law.

They therefore respectfully ask that a committee of Congress may be appointed to consider the subject, with authority to sit during the recess and report at the next session.

The petition was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution for consideration at this time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven members of this House be appointed with authority to report upon the causes of the decline of the American merchant marine, and to recommend to the House at its next session what changes in existing laws are needed to secure a revival of this interest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution at this time?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I ask consent that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have no objection to that.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WILLIAM A. GAVETT.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, Senate bill No. 679 for the relief of William A. Gavett.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William A. Gavett, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as the said Secretary shall be satisfied is equitably due, if anything, for the information and services of the said Gavett in the case of James C. Harris, of Tennessee: Provided, That the amount paid shall not exceed $2,650.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman wait until I can make a statement?

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 859) regulating rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices. That bill was reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and placed on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM,] in continuation of the privilege given by the special order of the House to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, calls up for consideration at this time the bill indicated by him, which will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the rate of postage on second-class publications deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by the carriers of the office shall be uniform at two cents a pound.

SEC. 2. That the proviso to section 20 of the act of March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department," &c., is hereby repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.]

Mr. MONEY. Before I make any remarks upon the merits of the bill, I desire to correct a typographical error. In line 1, section 2, the word "twenty" should be "twenty-five."

There was no objection, and the correction was made.

Mr. MONEY. This is a bill to produce uniformity in the rates of postage for second-class mail matter. As the law now stands to-day it is illogical and unjust. I do not suppose this bill will require much argument; a simple statement will be sufficient.

This bill has been twice reported unanimously by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The only objection that has heretofore been urged to it has been urged by the Post-Office Department, and upon the ground only that if this special rate upon papers and magazines at offices of publication in free-delivery cities should be repealed, an extra burden would be put upon the letter-carriers of these cities. This objection of the Post-Office Department has been removed. It was not sufficiently well founded in the first instance, because there was really no ground for the apprehension which the officers of the Department entertained. The Post-Office Department has very recently, in an official communication to this House, recommended that all postage be taken off newspapers and other printed matter of this class. Of course if the officers of the Department are willing that the whole burden of printed matter of this class should be put upon the letter-carriers without the payment of postage at all, they can have no further objection to this modification of the postal laws, which secures something like logic in the text of the law, and something like justice to the publishers of newspapers.

As the case stands to-day, as shown by the report of the committee, which is very brief, a newspaper published in New York or San Francisco or even in London or Paris can be transported through the United States mails to this city, put in the hands of the letter-carriers and delivered to every subscriber within the limits of this city, without the imposition of any extra rate whatever beyond 2 cents per pound. But a newspaper published in this city—the Post, Republican, Star, or Critic—must pay an extra rate of 1 cent for each copy delivered to their subscribers within this free-delivery city. In other words, the present provision of the law proceeds upon the principle that the more service the Government renders the less its pay should be, and the less service it renders the more its pay should be. The House will at once see the inconsistency, the want of logic in this arrangement. A San Francisco newspaper can come here through the mails and be distributed to every subscriber in the city free of any postal charge except the 2 cents per pound, while papers published in this city are not admitted to the same privilege.

As I said a moment ago, the apprehension that the letter-carriers would be weighed down by the burden of the mails if this change in the law should be made was, in the first place, not well founded. All the heavy magazines, such as the Century, Harper's, the North American Review, would pay a very slightly increased rate under the provisions of this bill, if enacted. These magazines now pay only two cents a copy, their weight generally being from nine to eleven ounces. But the light magazines, such as the Missionary Herald, the oldest of all the magazines published in the United States, and certainly one of the best, are now obliged to pay upon the copies sent, for instance, to 1,000 subscribers in Boston $240 postage for each delivery, while the same number of copies can be sent to this city for about $35.

As to the daily papers, every man residing in a city who peruses the morning or the evening papers knows that the publishers cannot use the mails to deliver papers to their readers in the city of publication, because the mail delivery is not at a suitable hour. The man who takes a morning paper wants it at his breakfast table, long before the first delivery by the letter-carriers, which is never earlier than eight o'clock. The man who reads an evening paper wants to read it fresh from the press; he cannot wait till it has been sent to the post-office and delivered by a mail-carrier. So that there can be no apprehension that this class of printed matter will burden the carriers. As to the magazines, we all know that they are, to a large extent, sold by the newsdealers; and, as I have stated, the heavier ones will pass about as cheaply through the mails under this bill as they now do.

This bill coincides entirely, so far as it goes, with the recent recommendation of the Postmaster-General. I am not willing to go so far as he is, and say that all the printed matter of the country should be relieved from this postal charge; but I am willing to say that this extra rate which without any reason, consistency, logic, or justice is now imposed upon this class of matter at the office of publication in letter-carrier cities should be removed. We now transmit through the mails all over the country parcels of merchandise weighing less than four pounds; they are delivered to the person to whom they are addressed and no extra rate is imposed upon them. Books of every description are sent through the mails and delivered by the carriers in free-delivery cities without extra charge. The weekly newspapers of the country are by law permitted to go free of postage to all their subscribers in the county of publication except in letter-carrier cities, and then they are subjected only to the charge of two cents per pound. The only discrimination is against magazines and daily newspapers. As will be seen at once, there is no danger whatever of these two classes of publications becoming a burden upon the carriers under this bill. It simply proposes to remove one of the most glaring inconsistencies that ever crept into any law upon the statute-book. It will do justice to a class of publishers conducting publications which ought to pass through the mails at the lowest rates. At present those magazines which are the educators of the people, which represent the religion, the intelligence, the culture of society, are the very publications coming within the restrictions of the law and are to a certain extent prohibited from free circulation.

Now I suppose it is for the House to decide. I do not know that there is any objection to the bill, but I desire to say this much——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield the floor?

Mr. MONEY. I do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I offer what I send to the desk as an additional section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Strike out the word "three" and insert "two" on the eighth line of section 3903 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 7. Strike out sections 3905 and 3906 and insert "that the postage on second-class mailable matter be, and the same is hereby, abolished, and that such mail matter shall be conveyed in the mails of the United States free from postal charges."

Mr. PEELLE. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the point of order?

Mr. PEELLE. That it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why?

Mr. PEELLE. This relates to newspapers, and the gentleman's amendment relates to the reduction of letter postage.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I say that amendment is clearly in order. It is so clear there is no necessity to argue it. The bill relates to the reduction of postage, and I do not see how my amendment cannot be considered germane.

Mr. MONEY. The substance of the bill is pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is no such bill the same as this amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that the amendment is not in order to this bill, because there is now substantially the same proposition pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be produced and the gentleman will find that it is not so.

Mr. MONEY. It is substantially the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there such a bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be produced.

Mr. PEELLE. There is more than one bill pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads looking to the same end.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Produce the bill.

Mr. PEELLE. That can be easily done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. You will find no bill before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads such as the amendment I have offered.

Mr. PEELLE. There is a number of bills before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads reducing the postage on letters to two cents.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My amendment is not only to reduce postage, but to abolish postage on second-class mail matter.

Mr. MONEY. You have introduced such a bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The bill only relates to one feature of my amendment.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman's amendment refers to two bills now pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No such bill as my amendment is pending before the committee. You have bills relating to different features of the amendment, but no bill embracing all the features of my amendment.

Mr. MONEY. This amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois embraces two bills pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The rule is quite different from what the gentleman apprehends it to be. The rule is that the pending bill must be substantially that of the amendment proposed to be offered. Now, no such bill is pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I am willing the bills shall be brought in here.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether any gentlemen can evade the rule which says a member shall not move an amendment substantially the same as a bill pending by simply making his amendment cover two pending bills?

The SPEAKER. There is some difficulty about that. If it is made to appear an amendment proposed is the same as pending propositions before the House——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am willing to concede that; but the point is this: they claim there are bills pending before the committee which taken together would cover all of this amendment, but I maintain that does not make my amendment obnoxious to the rule. The amendment under the rule must be covered by a bill pending before the House—not bills, but bill. That is the language of the rule.

Mr. PEELLE. The spirit of the rule evidently reaches the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call attention to the rule.

The SPEAKER. It is clear to the Chair that the purpose of the rule is to prevent amendments being offered to the pending bill substantially the same as propositions already pending before the House. If it should turn out the proposition is so embraced, it is not in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask to have the rule read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read paragraph 4, Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, then, on that point it will be seen that the rule expressly provides that no bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any bill pending before the House. It says bill or resolution pending before the House, it does not say bills or resolutions. It is in the singular number and it provides that the amendment must be substantially the same as a bill or resolution pending before the House. How, then, can it be argued this rule applies to my amendment which embraces the features of a number of bills? There are bills before that committee, one relating to one feature and others to other features of my amendment, but I maintain there is no bill pending in the House which embraces all the features of this amendment and which are the same as this amendment.

Mr. PEELLE. Here is House bill No. 1036, which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1882, the rate of postage on all domestic letters transmitted through the mails of the United States, and not exceeding one-half ounce in weight, shall be uniform at 2 cents, and for each half ounce or fraction thereof of additional weight there shall be charged an additional rate of 2 cents, to be in all cases prepaid by postage-stamps plainly affixed to such letters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That, it will be seen, covers only one of the features of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PEELLE. That covers clearly, Mr. Speaker, one of the points, a substantive point, in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. Now, it will hardly be claimed that because the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois covers two points, which are clearly embodied in pending bills, that it would bring his amendment within the rule and save it from the point of order urged against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, the gentleman from Indiana admits that I am correct in the statement that the bill to which he refers relates to only one feature of this proposed amendment. Any man can see, however, that the amendment which I propose goes a great deal further, and while it may embody a single feature in a bill pending, it does a great deal more. It is not, then, subject to the rule. That is as plain as that two and two make four; and while it is true, as I have said, that the amendment covers only one of the features of this bill to which he refers, it embodies other propositions entirely different and goes a great deal further. The bill he mentions, therefore, has nothing further to do with the amendment than that it merely relates to one single feature of the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I hardly believe, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois is serious in his attempt to pervert the rules of the House by that kind of an argument. This is not a question of grammatical construction, or of grammatical form, but a question which relates to the spirit and intent of the rules of the House. I suppose the gentleman would lay down the principle that because it is a crime to steal a hog, a man can evade the law and be held guiltless under an indictment by stealing two hogs; and according to his logic, if a man wants to introduce an amendment here which is obnoxious to the rule because it embodies the substance of a pending bill, all that he has got to do is to incorporate in it the provisions of one or two other bills and it takes it from under the operation of the rule. Now the gentleman has introduced an amendment here which covers substantially two bills pending before the committee; and he proceeds to say that because the amendment covers the features of the two the rule is not operative upon it. I repeat that my friend is going to the grammar and not to the spirit of the law to evade the point of order; and because we make a point of order that the amendment does not contain the substance of only one but of two bills, and because the offense is greater than the law provides for he claims that it does not meet his case. I repeat I hardly think he is serious in what he says.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Mississippi has made the illustration that he has with reference to an indictment, for the logic of the gentleman's position is that if a man was indicted for stealing an ox you can convict him if he steals a hog.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, no; the gentleman did not understand me that way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is the logic of his argument. Now, the amendment which I introduced proposes a reduction of the letter-mail postage and abolishes the postage on newspapers mailed from the offices of publication. There is no bill before the House that embraces these two features. A bill has been brought in and referred to here which reduces the postage on letter mail, but says nothing whatever with regard to the postage on newspapers mailed at the offices of publication.

I still maintain, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the language of the rule is too plain to be misunderstood, that the amendment must be substantially the same as a bill—not two bills or three bills, but the substance of one bill pending before this House; and I hold that this amendment is not substantially the same as that, and does not come under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it matters whether the proposition is one that is to be found in several bills pending before the House or in only a single bill. But let us look at the question a little closer. The bill before the House is a bill to regulate the rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is to reduce the rate of postage upon ordinary letters and newspapers. It undertakes to amend the statutes in another respect and entirely different from that proposed by the pending bill. The Chair is by no means satisfied that the amendment would be germane to this bill. This is not a general proposition to revise the postal laws of the United States; but if it be a fact that any portion of this amendment is, in substance, included in a pending bill or pending bills, then that portion would clearly not be in order. But there being a portion of the amendment not in order, as must be conceded, it is perfectly clear that the whole amendment must go out. If a portion of a proposition submitted is clearly not in order the whole must be rejected, for under no cover of including that which is not in order with that which is could such an amendment be admitted.

The Chair holds, therefore, the amendment is not in order under the point of order made against it.

The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to make a verbal amendment which he has suggested to correct the text of the bill. Without objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to talk about five minutes in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be heard.

Mr. CANNON. I must be permitted to express some doubt, Mr. Speaker, as to the propriety of this proposed legislation. The letter-carrier system, as I recollect, costs about $3,000,000, existing as it does in about one hundred and twelve to about one hundred and fifteen cities. Under the present law, as I understand it, the newspapers of the country make up about three-fourths of the whole mail matter. It costs to transport the mails probably from twenty to twenty-five millions of dollars in round numbers. These yield for postage about $1,200,000. Now, as I understand the law, in the counties where the newspapers are printed they are permitted to go free through the mails except in the one hundred and fifteen letter-carrier offices, and the reason for that exception is this: that if the newspapers were allowed to go free through the mails in the letter-carrier offices they would be liable to weigh down the carriers. For instance, suppose you take the city of Boston or the city of Chicago or the city of New York. There they have letter-carrier offices, and you dump ten tons of mail every morning, or one hundred tons, as the case may be, for distribution by the letter-carriers free without postage. Now, that will either break down the letter-carrier system or it will increase its expense, if you make it effective, two or three fold, so that I doubt the propriety of it. Gentlemen say, however, as I understand it, that the papers will not go this way to any great extent. They say the daily papers will not be delivered in that way at all. I am not so sure about that. Whenever you give the power of having the papers distributed in the letter-carrier offices without postage, I am not so sure, at least in all smaller cities, but there will be a demand raised for the letter-carriers to carry them, and to carry them sufficiently early to suit those who receive the papers. I am inclined to think that will be the case; and in the larger cities I am not so sure but the same thing will be the case. I think we had better let the letter-carrier system go right along as it is. It is operating very well. It costs $3,000,000 a year. Some people grumble at that. I never was inclined to grumble at that. While in a great many little cities it does not pay, still it is a great convenience. But I do not believe we ought to throw this additional work upon it.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] said it was a very peculiar state of law that you might mail a paper printed in New York to Philadelphia or Chicago or San Francisco and have that paper delivered there free in Philadelphia, San Francisco, or Chicago, and yet could not have it done in New York. That is true; and it does look a little inequitable and a little strange. But the reply to that is that no considerable number of those papers go to Philadelphia or Chicago or San Francisco; but that if you let them go free in the letter-carrier office where they are published, for instance in New York, or Philadelphia, or Boston, you at once weight down the mails; you at once burden this meritorious service.

That is all I have to say about it. I think the House ought to think twice before it passes this bill. I do not think it ought to pass.

Mr. MONEY. I had anticipated what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in the remarks I submitted to the House. The information from some of the larger post-offices of the United States is that in the opinion of the employés in those offices this will not increase perceptibly the burden on the letter-carriers, for the reasons I have stated. It is obvious to every man who reads a daily paper that no one will consent to wait for the first morning letter-carrier delivery for his morning newspapers. The newspapers will be scattered over the city before the letter-carriers go out upon their rounds. There is not the slightest foundation for this apprehension; not a bit in the world.

Mr. HILL. I shall favor this bill; and I am in favor of any bill that is in the interest of the people and for the good of the people and that favors reform and improvement in our postal service. But I do feel that the committee have made a mistake and that they should have first taken hold of the letter-postage bill reducing postage to 2 cents, and made a reduction in that direction, and prepared the way whereby we might have many other reforms so necessary to the Department and which are in the interest and for the welfare of the people.

I was looking over last night an article in the New York Tribune of the 17th instant to which my attention has been called, a statement by the postmaster at New York City that they required there additional mail facilities, and that the surplus should be used to increase the efficiency of the service; that what was wanted was not lower postage, but "more efficiency in the service."

Now, this is just what we contend 2 cents postage will accomplish, by increasing correspondence and thereby increasing revenue, and thus providing means to make the service more efficient. Under the present 3-cent postage rate there has been a constant deficiency in the revenues of the Department. If the letter postage were reduced to 2 cents, the rapid increase of correspondence will in a short time result in large and constantly increasing surplus of receipts, thus enabling the Department to give the public every needed improvement in the service. The city of New York has now below Canal street, about one mile from the post-office, only nine deliveries, and above Canal street to Harlem River only five to seven deliveries, and only three and four deliveries in Westchester County, within the city limits.

Now, I find in the city of London each district within about three miles of the general post-office, and in a circuit of six miles there are daily twelve deliveries, commencing 7.20 a. m. The last delivery, extending to all the districts, begins at about 7.45 p. m. The first is 7.20; second, 8.30; third delivery at about 10 a. m. The next nine deliveries are made in every district hourly. Each delivery within the town limit occupies about an hour.

I find that there they are enjoying the very best of postal facilities, as I have seen them nearly perfect in every respect, and all for the very reason and fact that they have what they call the penny postage, two cents of our money, which creates an extensive correspondence and yields a large revenue to the post-office department, whereby they have everything that is required to facilitate the moving of the mails and operating the business of the department and making efficient its work and giving to the people all the accommodation that they desire; and so I think it would be in New York City; with lower postage a larger revenue would be realized, and the service become more efficient, hourly delivery be given to the people in every part of the city, and the business men as well as all other citizens be well served.

In Great Britain there is a population of 34,505,043; and yet the last report of their post-office department of 1880 that we have shows that 1,176,000,000 letters passed through the post-office there that year, yielding a revenue to the government of over $12,988,840. In this country, with a population of 50,152,866, only 847,830,029 letters passed through the post-office during the same year, and there was a deficiency in the revenues of the Department of $3,227,324. In this country we have a 3-cent rate of letter postage; in Great Britain the rate is equivalent to 2 cents, and their standard of weight through the mails double that in the United States, showing very clearly that cheap postage creates correspondence and increases revenues. And it must be considered that while Great Britain is more compact and has less expense attending her postal matters, yet by the above figures for 1880 it will be seen that the United States, with a population of fifty millions, has nearly one-third less number of letters passing through the mails.

Give us a 2-cent rate of letter postage in this country, and I believe that the revenue of the Post-Office Department will be large enough in due time to enable us to give the people all the great reforms and improvements in the postal service for which they ask. And by and by perhaps we will be able to give the people 1-cent letter postage. We are growing in population in this country every month and every year, and also our resources are developing and business increasing. The people of the country are corresponding with each other more every year. With cheaper postage this correspondence will increase and the revenues of the Post-Office Department will increase also, for the cheaper we can make postage to the masses the greater, more extended, and more frequent will be communication and the multiplication of exchanges one with the other.

New facilities which give circulation of correspondence tend greatly to transmit knowledge and intelligence throughout the country. Instead of seeking to make the Post-Office Department a source of material profit we should have in view the great national profit, the increase of all the relations of society.

The postmaster of New York in the article referred to says "this talk about cheap postage benefiting the working classes and farmers to any extent is not sensible, as they are the ones who do very little letter-writing;" that the post-offices in little towns and villages concern a comparatively small number of people, "and if they have a money-order and registered-letter department, and two or three mails a day, that is about all that can be done for them and all they can expect. The improvement is needed in the larger cities." By this it will be seen what is wanted is more efficient work about the city post-offices; that the little post-offices for the benefit of the farmers and the workingmen scattered around the country are of no account. Why, Mr. Speaker, the workingmen of this country, the farmers of this country, the people outside of the business circles of this country have a great deal to do with furnishing the revenue whereby the mails are transported and the whole business of the Post-Office Department supported and carried on.

They are indispensable to the business men of the country, as correspondence with them and each other forms a very important part of the mails, and they could hardly get along without them; they are necessary to create business and build up the country. It is further remarked in the article referred to that "the more efficient the service the more it will be used." That is true; and the cheaper the postage the more the mails will be used and greater correspondence there will be, which will in the end increase the revenue and prepare the way for greater efficiency in the postal service, both in the city and in the country.

I hold, therefore, we should have commenced first to reduce postage; then as the way opened for it we should reduce the standard of weight for carrying through the mails; then reduction on newspapers and drop-letters and all these other matters. But first of all we should have done that which is most in the interest and for the good of the people at large throughout the country, a reduction of the rates of letter-postage.

I shall vote for this bill. I have cheerfully voted for all the bills that have been presented that come from this committee, and shall continue to vote for every bill that is in the interest of postal reform and improvement of the service. I trust that after we have passed these several bills reported by the Post-Office Committee the House will then take up the 2-cent postage bill and make that a law, and try if that system will not work as well in this country as it does in England.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOREY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VIOLATIONS OF POSTAL LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

Mr. MOREY. I now call up from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4954) making certain violations of the postal laws a misdemeanor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any postmaster, post-office inspector, or other official employed in the postal service who shall do, or cause to be done, or aid and abet in the doing of any act forbidden by any law relating to the postal service, or who shall willfully neglect or refuse to perform any duty imposed on him by law, shall, unless the punishment for such offense be otherwise provided for by existing law, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100, and may be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, not more than thirty days.

Mr. DE MOTTE. I would like to inquire the object of this bill.

Mr. MOREY. It is simply a general statute to cover any violation of the postal laws that are not now specifically provided for in the statutes. It fixes a punishment of not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars fine, and imprisonment of not more than thirty days. It is recommended by the Department.

Mr. DE MOTTE. I understand that; but I supposed some specific provision had already been made.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is an omission in the statutes.

Mr. DE MOTTE. That is what I wish to find out—what crime and misdemeanors have not been provided for.

Mr. MOREY. The acts specified in this bill; any willful violation of any order or regulation that may be made by the Post-Office Department under the law. Certain discretion is vested in the Postmaster-General to provide rules and regulations for the government of postmasters and their offices. This bill is intended to cover any offense not specifically provided for by the statutes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOREY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FALSE CERTIFICATES OF MAIL ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES.

Mr. LACEY. I call up from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4951) to punish postmasters for making false certificates of the arrivals and departures of mail. It was reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill as proposed to be amended will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any postmaster or other employé of the postal service charged with the keeping of registers of arrivals and departures of the mails who shall, for any purpose, willfully make and render, or cause to be made and rendered, to the Post-Office Department, any false register, record, certificate, or other report of arrivals or departures of the mails, or any other false return, or who, having knowledge of delinquencies of mail contractors, their agents or carriers, shall fail to report the same promptly to the Postmaster-General, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or shall be imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

The amendments reported from the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, ETC.

Mr. PEELLE. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3255) to amend sections 269 and 277 and to repeal section 270 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the first paragraph of section 269 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows: "First. To examine all accounts settled by the First Auditor, except those relating to receipts from customs, and all accounts settled by the Fifth Auditor and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to certify the balances arising thereon to the Register," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"First. To examine all accounts settled by the First Auditor, except those relating to receipts from customs, and all accounts settled by the Fifth and Sixth Auditors and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to certify the balances arising thereon to the Register: Provided, That all balances arising from the settlement of the accounts of the Sixth Auditor, together with the accounts and vouchers pertaining thereto, shall be certified back to said Auditor."

SEC. 2. That the first clause of paragraph 7 of section 277 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows: "Seventh. The Sixth Auditor shall receive all accounts arising in the Post-Office Department or relative thereto, with the vouchers necessary to a correct adjustment thereof, and shall audit and settle the same and certify the balances thereon to the Postmaster-General," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. The Sixth Auditor shall receive and examine all accounts arising in the Post-Office Department, or relative thereto, together with the accounts and vouchers necessary to a correct adjustment thereof, and certify the balances arising thereon, together with all accounts and vouchers pertaining thereto, to the First Comptroller; and when the balances shall have been certified back to him as determined by the Comptroller, said Sixth Auditor shall then certify such balances so returned to him by the First Comptroller to the Postmaster-General."

SEC. 3. That section 270 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PEELLE. I ask that the report of the committee be read, as it proposes an amendment under the direction of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is not the amendment reported in the bill?

Mr. PEELLE. No, sir; it is stated in the report.

The SPEAKER. It ought to have been reported in the bill. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. PEELLE. I ask that the report be read, as it will show the amendment which I propose to offer on behalf of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Your committee to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3255) to amend sections 269 and 277, and to repeal section 270 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The First and Fifth Auditors of the Treasury are required to certify all balances arising from the settlement of accounts by them to the First Comptroller, except accounts arising from the receipts from customs, which are required to be certified by the First Auditor to the Commissioner of Customs, who, under section 317 of the Revised Statutes, has the same power as the First Comptroller with reference to such accounts. The Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors are required to certify all balances arising from the accounts settled by them to the Second Comptroller; while the accounts settled by the Sixth Auditor are not only required to be examined by him and audited, but his decisions thereon are final, except in case of appeal, as provided in section 270 of said statutes, to the First Comptroller. As a matter of fact your committee find that few appeals have been taken, and it will be seen from said section 270 that the Sixth Auditor has it in his power to prevent appeals, and thereby avoid a review of his decisions by any other officer of the Treasury by simply making satisfactory allowances.

This bill provides that the accounts settled by the Sixth Auditor shall be passed upon by the First Comptroller, and that the balances found by the First Comptroller shall be the balances certified to the Postmaster-General by the Sixth Auditor, after the same shall have been certified back to him by the First Comptroller, thereby avoiding any innovation in the mode of doing business in the Post-Office Department, and at the same time conforming the Sixth Auditor to the same rule or check as in the case of all other Auditors.

Your committee recommend that said bill be amended by adding thereto a fourth section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That wherever the words 'Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department' occur in any law, the same shall be construed to mean 'Sixth Auditor of the Treasury,' and hereafter that officer shall be known in all official transactions as Sixth Auditor of the Treasury."

And that when said bill be so amended, your committee recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PEELLE] will give an explanation of this bill.

Mr. PEELLE. Mr. Speaker, the preparation and introduction of this bill were suggested to me because of the alleged charges of irregularity growing out of the star-route contracts. I desire it distinctly understood that, in presenting the bill to the House, I disclaim any purpose whatever of reflecting upon anybody, official or otherwise, in connection with those contracts. My purpose is to secure uniformity in the settlement of accounts in the Treasury Department.

Section 269 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 defines the duties of the First Comptroller of the Treasury. This proposed amendment of that section simply includes the accounts of the Sixth Auditor among those which shall be settled and adjusted by the First Comptroller of the Treasury. The duty of the Sixth Auditor as heretofore defined by law has been not only to audit the accounts of the Post-Office Department but to settle those accounts and certify the balances not to the Register of the Treasury but to the Postmaster-General. Every other Auditor except the Sixth Auditor is required to certify his accounts to the First or the Second Comptroller for final adjudication, except that accounts arising in the customs department are certified to the Commissioner of Customs, who, under section 317 of the Revised Statutes, has the power of a Comptroller. I believe that the accounts audited by the Sixth Auditor should pass the scrutiny of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, so that the adjustment of accounts in the Treasury Department may be made uniform. That is simply the purpose of this bill.

Section 277 of the Revised Statutes, which this bill proposes to repeal, provides for an appeal from the Sixth Auditor to the First Comptroller in case of any dissatisfaction on the part of either of the parties interested.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman will allow me to ask why he desires the repeal of that section? Does it not provide a salutary check?

Mr. PEELLE. The reason of the proposed repeal is that the section will become unnecessary if this bill should become a law, because all the accounts will be transferred from the Sixth Auditor to the First Comptroller for final adjudication.

This bill includes all the accounts of the Post-Office Department. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment which will except from its provisions the accounts of the money-order department and those of postmasters. When this amendment has been made all the accounts pertaining to ocean steamboat, railroad, and star-route mail service will go to the First Comptroller. In the adjudication of money-order accounts and postmasters' accounts no trouble so far as I know has ever arisen; and the making of the exceptions which I shall propose by way of amendment will lessen the amount of force required in the First Comptroller's Office to pass upon and settle these accounts.

The section which the committee propose to add to the bill by way of amendment seeks simply to restore to the Sixth Auditor the name which that officer originally bore. The act creating this office used the designation "Sixth Auditor of the Treasury;" and it is only by virtue of subseqnent legislation that this officer has become known as the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department. This additional section provides simply that the words "Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department" wherever they occur in any law shall be construed to mean "Sixth Auditor of the Treasury," and hereafter this officer shall in all official transactions be known by the designation of Sixth Auditor of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been submitted to the First Comptroller of the Treasury for his opinion. It has also been submitted to the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury. While the Sixth Auditor does not oppose the policy proposed by this bill, I am free to say he is not in accord with this, because he believes the accounts settled by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury cannot be passed upon by the First Comptroller in the time allowed by law for the settlement of those accounts.

The difficulty which he suggests and which forms the basis of his objection to the bill has been somewhat eliminated by the exceptions I propose to make, excepting money-order and postmasters' accounts. In connection with this, as to the amount of additional force which will be required in the First Comptroller's Office for the settlement of these accounts, I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I have received from the First Comptroller of the Treasury in response to my inquiry upon that question.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your request for an estimate of the number of clerks which would be required—in addition to the present force of this office—to re-examine here the accounts examined in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, I have to submit the following:

For accounts of contractors, railroad and ocean transportation, star and steamboat service, eight clerks.

For quarterly and general accounts of postmasters, sixteen clerks.

For accounts of postmasters under the money-order system, six clerks.

In the Auditor's Office about one hundred and twenty clerks are employed in the money-order division. Their principal work is comparing the orders paid with the accounts of the postmasters who issued the orders and those who paid them. To make similar comparisons here would require as many clerks in this office. But even with such a force, it is thought that it would be impracticable to do the work owing to the necessity of keeping all the accounts in one place. If, however, it be assumed in this office that the orders have been carefully examined and properly checked in the Auditor's Office, I am of opinion that six clerks, as estimated above, can make a general examination of the results shown by the Auditor's work, in order to ascertain whether the accounts have been correctly adjusted.

Three of the clerks in this estimate of thirty should be chiefs of division, and should be paid accordingly.

Very respectfully,

WM. LAWRENCE,
Comptroller.

Hon. STANTON J. PEELLE, House of Representatives.

Mr. PEELLE. It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill shall go through as it is now, providing for the First Comptroller passing upon the accounts of postmasters and money-order accounts, it would require a much larger force, so that at least three would have to be chiefs of divisions, as stated by the First Comptroller of the Treasury; but to pass upon ocean, steamboat, railroad, and star-route accounts he says it would require but eight additional clerks in his office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is simply a question for this House to determine whether the accounts of the Sixth Auditor shall be transferred to the First Comptroller of the Treasury to pass under his scrutiny at an expense of the salary of eight clerks or not.

I have taken some pains to examine the Sixth Auditor's office, and while I am prepared to say the business in that office is conducted with rare discretion and ability, while, in my judgment, it has been done in a very systematic manner, while I could make no criticism on any of the auditors who have occupied that position, and while I have no disposition to do so, yet I am free to say unless the accounts of the Sixth Auditor's office can be passed under the scrutiny of the First Comptroller for his final determination, no mode can be adopted for the settlement of those accounts in that office which will not be liable to abuse. For that reason I wish the settlement of accounts in the Department to be uniform; and in this connection, and in justice to the present as well as the preceding auditors, I wish to call attention to the following letter, which shows the mode of doing business in the Sixth Auditor's office. The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY, FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your request I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement of the organization, powers, and duties of my office, the methods of auditing and settling accounts, &c. Your special attention is invited to the increase in the work of the office since 1871 as compared with the increase in clerical force.

Very respectfully,

J. H. ELA, Auditor.

Hon. S. J. PEELLE, House of Representatives.

In the matter of the organization, powers, and duties of the office of Sixth Auditor, or Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department.

The powers and duties of the Auditor, as defined by law, generally stated, are:

To receive all accounts arising in the Post-Office Department, or relating thereto, with the vouchers necessary to a correct adjustment thereof, and to audit and settle the same and certify the balances thereon to the Postmaster-General, and to keep and preserve all accounts and vouchers after settlement. (R. S., section 277.)

To superintend the collection of all debts due the Post-Office Department, and all penalties and forfeitures imposed for any violation of the postal laws, or arising under other statutes where they are the consequence of unlawful acts affecting the revenues or property of the Post-Office Department. (R. S., section 292.)

He may, with the written consent of the Postmaster-General, compromise a judgment obtained for a debt or damages due the Department when it satisfactorily appears that such judgment, or any part thereof, cannot be collected by due process of law, and accept less than the full amount thereof. (R. S., section 295.)

He is required to register, charge, and countersign all warrants upon the Treasury for receipts or payments issued by the Postmaster-General, when warranted by law. (R. S., section 277.)

He shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury quarterly the receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department, and perform such other duties in relation to the financial concerns of the Department as he may assign to him; and he shall make such reports respecting the receipts, expenditures, and financial concerns of the Department as either the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster-General may require. (R. S., section 277.)

It is made the duty of the Postmaster-General to decide on the forms of all official papers; to prescribe the manner of keeping and stating accounts.

To control according to law and subject to the settlement of the Auditor all expenses incident to the service of the Department.

To enforce the prompt rendition of returns relative to accounts. (Revised Statutes, section 396.)

The Auditor has direct official relations with both the Treasury and Post-Office Departments, being in many respects the officer both of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General. (Attorney-General Cushing, 7 Opinions, 439.)

The office of the Auditor is organized in eight divisions, namely:

Examining, registering, bookkeeping, stating, collecting, pay, foreign-mail, and money-order.

The accounts settled are of three classes:

Postal accounts.

Money-order accounts.

Transportation, supply, and agents' accounts.

The method of auditing and settling is as follows:

1. THE POSTAL ACCOUNT.

An account current, showing the revenues collected and office expenses under each head is rendered by each postmaster quarterly. This is received by the examining division, where a stamp clerk first checks the stamp entries with the record of issues and receipts furnished by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General and already recorded by offices in a stamp-book. The whole account is then examined and settled by an examiner. The account next passes to the registering division, where the settlement is reviewed and the items entered on a register under the proper heads of revenue, expenditure, and final balance. Should an error appear in the postmaster's statement the account is reviewed in the error-room of the examining division and the postmaster advised of the correction.

Ninety days are required to audit, settle, and register the 45,000 accounts current received each quarter. When the registers are recapitulated they are handed over to the bookkeeping division.

Postmasters are required to deposit the balances found due by them quarterly or oftener, according to the class of office, at certain designated postal or Treasury depositories. The certificates of deposit, when received through the Third Assistant Postmaster-General's Office, are examined in the bookkeeping division, checked with the weekly transcript of drafts paid and deposits received rendered by each depository, and registered.

Payments by postmasters to letter-carriers, mail messengers, special carriers, railway post-office clerks, route agents, mail-route messengers, local agents, and for temporary mail service, are not entered in the account current. A separate return is made for these, and they are settled on special desks of the pay division. A register is kept of these settlements, which, at the close of each quarter, is turned over to the bookkeeping division.

On the money-order division is kept a quarterly register of all transfers from or to the postal account, and this, when completed, is transferred to the bookkeeping division. Thus the records of credits and debits pertaining to a postmaster's account, whenever made, finally reach the bookkeeping division, where a ledger, or what is styled a "general postal account," is kept with each postmaster. To this account is carried the items found on the several registers before handed over, and also all journal entries made for the correction of accounts after they have been audited. These accounts when with offices of the fourth class—all where the salary is below $1,000 per annum—are drawn off by the stating division on prescribed forms, which, when folded, are briefed on the outside with the name of office and postmaster, date of appointment, bond and commission, &c. These "slips" are filed alphabetically and stated up quarterly. The accounts with Presidential offices are stated, in part, from the auxiliary registers, in advance of the ledgers, and compared with a quarterly statement of general account rendered from offices of this class. All accounts are, however, compared with the ledgers, each division checking the other.

The stating division is required to watch the account, report delinquencies, &c., and conduct the correspondence on current accounts with Presidential offices.

The collecting division is charged with the adjustment of accounts with late postmasters and contractors, the collection of the balances found due thereon, and in general the correspondence growing out of the general postal account. A brief of all correspondence had or action taken is made on a fold of the stated account, letters, or other papers on which it is based, and the bond of the postmaster when late being filed inside. On this division the weekly report of changes made up in the appointment office of the Post-Office Department is recorded and all copies of accounts made.

2. THE MONEY-ORDER ACCOUNT.

This is rendered by each postmaster at a money-order office weekly, and includes all items of revenue and expenditure pertaining to that account; inclosed with it are all money-orders paid, repaid, or void.

An examiner checks paid, repaid, and void entries and all footings. In the draft-room the transfers, drafts, and deposits are verified, the checkers for whom the paid orders have been reassorted by the office of issue check the items of orders issued.

The Register receives the weekly statement from the checkers, reviews all errors noted, registers the account, and makes the quarterly settlement, he having charge of the general account.

3. THE TRANSPORTATION AND SUPPLY ACCOUNTS.

Railroad service.

The Postmaster-General, having placed the mails upon a railroad and determined the weight transported, issues his order recognizing the service and fixing the pay per mile and distance, certifying the same to the Auditor. The order is recorded in the pay division and an account opened with the company. At the close of each quarter, and on the receipt of a certificate from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General that service has been performed, the Auditor certifies back to the Postmaster-General that the amount he has fixed as the pay of said company per quarter, less fines and deductions he may have notified the Auditor of, is due, and on that certified account, prepared on the pay division, a warrant is drawn in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. When signed by the Postmaster-General the warrant, with the certified account attached, is transmitted to the bookkeeping division of the Auditor's office, where a comparison is made of name and amount and the warrant is registered to the proper appropriation.

It is then countersigned by the Auditor, noted on the pay division, returned to the Third Assistant, signed by the Treasurer of the United States, and finally mailed to the creditor by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Star and steamboat service.

This service, except when temporary, is under contract, all contracts being filed in the pay division. The rate of pay is obtained from the contract, but all increases and decreases by reason of increased trips or speed or discontinuance or curtailment of service are determined by the Postmaster-General and the revised annual rate of pay certified to the Auditor.

Copies of said contracts are filed in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, notice of such filing and the amount to be withheld from a contractor being sent to the Auditor; otherwise the methods of settlement for this service are the same as for railroads.

It will be noticed that in the settlement of railroad accounts the Auditor simply records and certifies back the action of the Postmaster-General, he not being furnished with the weight of mails, certificates of the mail-weighers, or any other data on which the order of the Postmaster-General or certificate of service is based; while in the settlement of the star-service accounts where service is expedited he has no evidence of the additional stock or number of carriers required by such expedition.

Supply accounts.

These are for stamped material, twine, wrapping-paper, locks, and keys, &c. The contracts therefor are filed in the pay division, and satisfactory evidence of the receipt of all articles for which bills are rendered is received. Accounts for advertising are adjusted in accordance with law.

A record is kept of the appointment of all special agents, of their pay and per diem as fixed by the Postmaster-General, and their accounts are settled monthly on satisfactory vouchers.

The several accounts stated by pay clerks pass a reviewing desk on the division, this being the only check on a settlement.

On the bookkeeping division a ledger account is kept with each railroad company and mail-contractor. When the settlements for a quarter are completed, a report is made by each pay clerk to the chief of the bookkeeping division of the gross amount found due for service on each route and the amount of all fines and deductions. These items are posted to the ledger account to which they pertain.

Against these are charged the warrants as registered, and a balance is struck each quarter. The pay division is advised of all accounts out of balance before the next quarter's settlement is made.

This check is simply to detect omissions or errors in addition.

Foreign mail transportation.

The compensation for ocean mail service is based on sea postages. These are made up on the foreign mail division from returns rendered from the dispatching offices, and the Postmaster-General is advised of the aggregate amount to be credited to each carrier. When an allowance is made an account is stated on the pay division and certified to the Postmaster-General.

Accounts with foreign governments.

These are rendered to the Auditor and audited and settled in the foreign mail division. The certificates of balances are prepared on this division.

In addition to the duty of supervision, the chief of the examining division, with an assistant, audits and settles the expense account of first and second class offices, keeping a register thereof.

The chief of the registering division has in charge one of the twelve sections of the division and recapitulates the final footings of all the registers.

The chief of the bookkeeping division keeps the general revenues, expenditure and appropriation accounts, accounts with foreign countries, Treasurer of the United States, and Executive Departments; prepares and registers all covering warrants and requisitions on the Treasury and the quarterly reports to the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster-General, and the annual report, with exception of the money-order business.

The chief of the stating division conducts the correspondence and attends to special cases.

The chief of the collecting division is charged with the special correspondence and the adjustment of the accounts of failing contractors and bidders.

The chief of the pay division is charged with special correspondence and attends to special cases.

The chief of the foreign mail division, with two assistants, performs all the work of the division.

The chief of the money-order division is charged with general correspondence, and checks all correspondence of the division.

The increase in the work of the office since 1871 is shown in part by the following comparative statement:

It will be noticed that the increase in work since 1871 is out of all proportion to the increase in the clerical force of the office.

The pressure for the dispatch of business—to make prompt settlements—is immense, and all the energies of the force are directed to that end. There has not, in consequence, been the opportunity for the consideration and adoption of new methods and for the exercise of the full powers with which the Auditor is clothed.

It appears to have been assumed in fixing the salaries and classifying the clerical force that the responsibilities of the Sixth Auditor were similar to those of the other Auditors of the Treasury. But this officer is not only auditor but comptroller and register for the Post-Office Department.

While an appeal lies from his decision to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, this right is rarely exercised. When a creditor or claimant is satisfied, the Auditor's settlement is, in practice, final.

Now, Mr. Speaker, whether there were any irregularities or not growing out of the star-route service, if these accounts had passed under the scrutiny of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, I believe there never would have been any difficulty in the star-route service.

Mr. CANNON. I cannot see, Mr. Speaker, how eight clerks in the First Auditor's office can be of any practical service to the Government in examining and passing on these accounts.

Mr. PEELLE. The First Comptroller of the Treasury says in the letter which has just been read that they will be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether eight clerks is all that is desired for that purpose?

Mr. PEELLE. Yes, with the exceptions I have indicated. From my conversation with the First Comptroller as well as from the statements contained in the letter which has just been read, I have his opinion that eight clerks will be all that will be required to pass upon the ocean steamboat, railroad, and star-route accounts.

Mr. CANNON. There are in round numbers, Mr. Speaker, 12,000 of those routes, the accounts of which have to be settled every three months, and under the contracts have to be settled within sixty days of the close of the quarter. In fact this is done in the inspection division of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Office. On the certificate of that inspection division they go to the Sixth Auditor and the Sixth Auditor takes the certificate of service and compares it with the contract, and if it appears under the contract the accounts certified to amount to so much, then he audits the account. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is merely for the purpose of doing all that a second time these accounts are to be referred to the First Comptroller's Office. Is that the object he desires to accomplish by this bill?

Mr. PEELLE. Not only that, but to pass upon the legal questions involved in the adjustment of those accounts.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not think we have checks enough now in passing upon these accounts. We already have two checks upon those accounts. In the first place, we have the Inspection Bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Office, and also the Sixth Auditor's office of the Treasury Department. The fact whether the service was performed or not according to the vouchers is examined by one clerk in the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Office.

And if that clerk makes a mistake or should be dishonest, then there would be certified down to the Sixth Auditor full service when there is but half service rendered. Now, I ask the gentleman from Indiana if he does not think the reform he contemplates would be more practical if he probed a little deeper and provided this force to examine the proofs of the service. I think that is a reform which is needed, rather than this examination which is spoken of here.

Mr. PEELLE. The seventh subdivision of section 277 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 reads as follows:

The Sixth Auditor shall receive all accounts arising in the Post-Office Department or relative thereto, with the vouchers necessary to a correct adjustment thereof, and shall audit and settle the same, &c.

So the law expressly provides now that the vouchers shall be before him when he passes upon these accounts. If in practice he does not have the vouchers before him, as provided by this section of the law, that of course is no defect in the law, but in the practice. But I am not prepared to say that there is any defect in the practice. I know the Sixth Auditor quite well, and entertain the highest regard both for his ability and integrity.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? I presume we both want to get at the facts of the case. That section has been construed from the beginning as applying only to the accounts of postmasters, and never to accounts touching mail transportation; and from the foundation of the Department to this time the Sixth Auditor, or no other officer, except the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, has ever examined these vouchers.

Mr. PEELLE. Mr. Speaker, I have interpreted the law according to the common rules of interpretation; and I find no exception which the gentleman names with reference to the star-route, steamboat, or railway mail service.

Mr. CANNON. I am only speaking of the facts.

Mr. PEELLE. I have no doubt as to the correctness of the statement the gentleman makes; but there is no necessity, if I construe the law correctly, for any additional law upon that subject. The fault is not with the law, if I am correct in my understanding of it.

Now, less than one year ago a case was appealed to the First Comptroller growing out of expedition of service on a star route; it was entitled the "Allman's case." That case is as follows:

In the matter of increased and expedited "star-route" mail service—Allman's appeal.

George Allman contracted with the Post-Office Department to carry the mails on route 46210, California, a distance of sixty-three miles, making a trip on each of six days in every week for $1,490 per annum, and on route 46211, California, once each week for $699 per annum, for four years from June 30, 1878. The trips on each route were by the Postmaster-General increased so as to require a trip each day.

February 21, 1881, the Postmaster-General made an order as to route 46210, as follows:

"1. From February 22, 1881, increase service one trip per week and allow contractor $748.33 per annum additional pay, being pro rata.

"2. Reduce running time from thirty-six hours to twenty eight hours and allow contractor $2,619.16 per annum additional pay, being 50 per cent. of original cost of service, but less than pro rata, as shown by carrier's sworn statement."

On the 25th of February, 1881, the Postmaster-General made the following order in respect to route No. 46211:

"1. From March 1, 1881, increase service from four (4) trips per week, and allow contractor $2,796 per annum additional pay, being pro rata.

"2. Reduce running time from thirty-four (34) hours to eighteen (18) hours, and allow contractor $2,446.50 per annum additional pay, being 50 per cent. of the original cost of the service, but less than pro rata, as shown by sworn statement of carrier."

The contractor was duly notified, and the "increased" and "expedited" service has been duly performed since the orders went into effect.

August 4, 1881, the Sixth Auditor, in settling the accounts of the contractor for the quarter year ending June 30, 1881, allowed him in respect to the "expedited" services on route 46210 an increase of 50 per cent. on the original contract price per trip for six trips per week, and on route 46211 an increase of 50 per cent. on the original contract price for only one trip per week.

August 4, 1881, Allman appealed from the settlement of the Sixth Auditor to the First Comptroller.

Nathaniel Wilson, for the contractor, made an able oral argument and submitted a brief, as follows:

"The act of April 7, 1880, (21 Stat., 71,) means that the contract as originally let must be taken as establishing the rate of pay, and the rate of pay for expedited service cannot exceed 50 per cent. of the rate of pay fixed by the contract. The limitation of 50 per cent. is of the rate of pay, and not of the aggregate of the payments to be made for expedited service. Thus in reference to the service on route 46211, as by the original contract, the service was to be performed once a week for $699 per annum, the statute limits the compensation for expediting that service to 50 per cent. of that sum, and if seven expedited trips are required instead of one then the contractor is entitled to seven times what he is allowed for one expedited trip. If he receives 50 per cent. of $699 ($699+$349.50=$1,048.50) he will receive a rate of pay not exceeding 50 per cent. upon the original contract."

The report of Hon. Thomas J. Brady, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, of November 1, 1879, contains this:

"Under section 3961 allowances for increased speed are based upon the sworn statements of contractors showing the additional stock and carriers required. This practically makes a man and a horse of equal value as factors in determining the rate of increased compensation to be allowed. I would, therefore, recommend that allowance for increased speed be based upon the proportion the cost of performing the original service bears to the cost of the service at the increased speed; and that such additional allowances shall in no case be greater than 50 per cent. of the original cost of the service. In case the cost of increased speed would amount to more than 50 per cent. of the cost of the original service, the Postmaster-General shall readvertise for service with the increased speed; or, in his discretion, he may advertise in any case where increased speed is necessary. The advertisement to be inserted for not less than thirty days in newspapers published at the termini of the route, or in those published elsewhere having circulation along the line of the route, the contract to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, as usual.

"This will accomplish, with but little delay, the desired improvement in the service, and with, I think, great advantage to the Government."

The section in the act of April 7, 1880, in question was reported by the Senate committee and passed on the statement that it was intended to carry out the recommendation of the Postmaster-General.

By section 3965 of the Revised Statutes the Postmaster-General may require an increase in the number of trips in his discretion; and under section 3961 he may expedite the service on each trip. It would cost the contractor more to run one trip per week in eighteen hours than in thirty-four. If 50 per cent. of the cost of one trip per week with thirty-four hours' running time would be a proper additional compensation for expediting that trip to eighteen hours, it certainly would not be a proper compensation for two, three, six, or seven trips per week. If the act of 1880 prohibits the Postmaster-General in every case where a contract has been made for one trip per week from paying for expedited service on any but that one trip, then the act has practically taken from him the power to authorize the performance of one trip per week under that contract. Policy required a construction which will not impair the powers of that officer.

Section 3961 has been uniformly construed as having reference to the trips specified and provided for in the contracts, and the term "compensation in the original contract" has always been understood to mean the sum of the cost of all the trips provided for under that contract, and which by the terms of the contract the contractor might be required to perform.

In presenting this appeal of the contractor, the attention of the Comptroller is called to the following provisions in the contractor's agreement with the Post-Office Department:

"It is hereby stipulated and agreed by the said contractor and his sureties that the Postmaster-General may discontinue or extend this contract, change the schedule and the termini of the route, and alter, increase, decrease, or extend the same in accordance with law, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation for any additional services thereby required, or for increased speed, if the employment of additional stock or carriers is rendered necessary; and, in case of decrease, curtailment, or discontinuance of service, as a full indemnity to said contractor, one month's extra pay in the amount of service dispensed with, and a pro rata compensation for the service retained: Provided, however, That, in case of increased expedition, the contractor may, upon timely notice, relinquish the contract."

Under this clause the contractor had the right to decline to perform the expedited service required of him. If he had been informed that he could not have been paid for all the expedited service on route 46611 but $349.50, he would undoubtedly have declined to perform it. He did not decline because he was promised by the Postmaster-General $2,446 in payment for the service when performed.

DECISION BY WILLIAM LAWRENCE, FIRST COMPTROLLER.

The questions arising on this appeal relate to what is called the "star-route service."*

* This service has been thus explained: The name "star route" has been adopted and is used by the Post-Office Department to designate all post-routes established by Congress other than railroads and steamboat routes.

Section 18 of the act of March 3, 1845, fifth statute, page 737, provides for the letting of contracts for the transportation of the mails to the lowest bidder, without other reference to the modes of such transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation.

Immediately after the passage of the above act blank contracts were printed with three groups of four stars each, thus:

**** **** ****

in the body of the contract, and are intended to signify the words "celerity," "certainty," and "security."

The word "star," as applied to post-routes, first appears officially in a report of

The act of April 7, 1880, (21 Stat., 71) "to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," makes an appropriation, and section 2 has a clause as follows:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let."

When an original contract is made for carrying the mail on any route for one trip in a week, and the Postmaster-General subsequently requires two or more trips in a week, the additional trips are increased or additional service. When such contract requires a trip to be made on a route in thirty-four hours, and the Postmaster-General requires it to be made in eighteen, or any less number of hours, this is expedited service.

For the purpose of presenting the principle decided by the Sixth Auditor, it will only be necessary to state his action in relation to compensation for service on one route, No. 46211. The original contract provided that the mail should be carried once in each week in thirty-four hours for $699 per annum. The service was subsequently increased four trips, making five in all per week, and the time was expedited to eighteen hours per trip. The Sixth Auditor, in his settlement of the contractor's account for the quarter ending June 30, 1881, allowed compensation at the rate of $699 per annum for each of the five trips per week, and allowed him for expedited service $87.37, being at the rate of 50 per cent. on the original contract price for one trip, and disallowed $524.25, as being in excess of 50 per cent. of the contract as originally let.* It will thus be seen that the order of the Postmaster-General of February 25, 1881, ordered an increase of 50 per cent. on the contract price for each of the five expedited trips per week; but the Sixth Auditor only allowed the extra 50 per cent. on one of the five trips per week, thus holding that the Postmaster-General exceeded his authority except as to the one trip per week. Did he so exceed his authority? This question now to be decided involves a construction of the statutes above cited.

It is clear from several considerations that the Postmaster-General exceeded his authority. The contractor can only claim an increase of 50 per cent. on the compensation for the one trip per week required "in the contract as originally let."

1. This is the plain meaning of the explicit language of the act of April 7, 1880, (21 Statutes, 71.) It provides "that the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract * * * to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let." It is entirely clear from this language that the increase of 50 per cent. relates to and is authorized solely "upon the contract as originally let," and for the service and compensation therein specified. The contract as "originally let" only authorized one trip per week at an annual compensation of $699. This was "the rate of pay" "upon the contract as originally let." And this is the rate of pay which the statute declares shall not be increased "exceeding 50 per cent." by reason of expedited service. It would do violence to the clear language of the statute to assign to it any other meaning. The Supreme Court has said that "statutes must rest on the words used—nothing adding thereto, nothing discriminating." (Leavenworth, &c., vs. United States, 92 U. S., 751.)

And this rule is carried so far that when the language of the Revised Statutes "is plain, the court cannot recur to the original statutes to see if errors were committed in revising them." (United States vs. Bowen, 100 United States, 508; United States vs. Hirsch, Id., 33; Waller vs. Harris, 20 Wend., 562; Sedgwick Stat., 195; Johnson vs. Bush, 3 Barb. Ch. R., 238; Young vs. Dake, 1 Selden, 463.) Vattel says "The first general maxim of interpretation is, that it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation." The maxim applies: Optime statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum.

2. A well-settled principle of construction leads to the same result. In construing a statute four things are to be considered: (1) the prior law; (2) the mischief which it authorizes, or for which it does not provide; (3) what remedy the later statute has provided; and (4) the reason of the remedy. (Potter's Dwarris, Stat., 184; Hayden's case, 3 Coke Rep., 7; 1 Kent Com., 462; 10 Coke, 57, 6; Plowd., 10, 57, 350, 363; Boulton vs. Bull, 1 H. Blackst., 499; 9 Wheat., 189; Sedgwick Stat., 198; 1 Blackst. Com., 87.)

The prior law conferred large powers on the Postmaster-General as to the increasing of service and the making of extra allowances for expedited service. This, as the act of April 7, 1880, shows, was deemed by Congress an evil. A skillful contractor might drive off competition by a bid to carry the mail one trip per week for less than the service was worth. Having done this, increased and expedited service might bring exorbitant compensation and profits. A door was opened to favoritism and fraud, contrary to the safe rule which should not lead into temptation. And if actual fraud should not exist two other evils were left—liability to enormous increase in expenditures without the direct sanction of Congress, and the danger from the exercise of large discretion to increase and expedite service where not needed and upon ex parte and interested representations. The investigations in Congress sufficiently show this. (Vol. 3, House Mis. Doc. 31, parts 1 and 2, March 25, 1880, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.)

The general state of opinion, public, legislative, and judicial, may be sometimes considered. (Keyport vs. Farmers, 3 C. E. Greene, 13; Delaplaine vs. Crenshaw, 15 Gratt., 457; Sedgwick Stat., 204 n.) The act of April 7, 1880, was designed to furnish a remedy for these evils, and the reason of the remedy is sufficiently apparent.

It has been urged that "it would be against the settled rules of law to give to this act an effect that would impair the general powers conferred on the Postmaster-General," &c. The essential purpose of the act was to limit and reduce the powers previously exercised under the Revised Statutes. It is a duty "so to construe statutes as to meet the mischief, and to advance the remedy." (Potter's Dwarris, 184; Hart vs. Cleis, 8 Johns., 44.) In Lynde vs. Bernard, it was said by Parke Baron that "we must always construe an act so as to suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy." (1 M. & W., 113; Potter's Dwarris, 73; Johns vs. Johns, 3 Dow, 15; Gillett vs. Moody, 3 N. Y., 479; People vs. Runkie, 9 Johns R., 147.) "This is especially the case as to statutes which relate to matters of public utility." (Magdalen College Case, 11 Coke R., 71, 6; Baring vs. Erdman, 14 Hazards, Pa., Register, 129.)

To hold that there may be an increase of 50 per cent. on every additional expedited trip is to leave the whole evil almost without, or at least with a very inadequate, remedy. In this case the original contract was for one trip per week at an annual compensation of $699. If there may be seven expedited trips each week with an increase of 50 per cent. on each, the annual compensation will be $7,339.50, or an increase of 350 per cent. in the rate of pay "upon the contract as originally let," and there is nothing to prohibit even two trips a day, and so double this expenditure. Upon the principles stated, the act of April 7, 1880, clearly must be construed to limit the authority of the Postmaster-General so that he may only give an increase of 50 per cent. on the service required in the original contract.

The meaning of the statute is not to be ascertained by reference to the report of the Postmaster-General or debates in Congress. (Sedgwick Stat., 203; Bank vs. Com., 7 Pa. St., 144; Southwark vs. Com., 26 Pa. St., 446; Leese vs. Clark, 12 Cal., 425; Taylor vs. Taylor, 10 Minn., 107.) But if this were otherwise there is nothing shown to change the result.

When payments have been made in excess of the amount lawfully authorized a question may arise whether there is a remedy for the United States; but this is not now presented for decision. When the Government has in its custody money due to a claimant there is an undoubted right to apply it by way of set-off as a credit on any equal amount due the United States from such claimant. (Rev. Stat., 236, 1059, 1061, 1766, 4734, 5073; act March 3, 1875, 18 Stat., 481; Gratiot vs. United States, 15 Pet., 370; United States vs. Wilkins, 6 Wheat., 144; McKnight vs. United States, 98 United States, 186; 4 Op., 380; Viser's case, 1 Lawrence, Comptroller's Decisions, 75.)

The question of reopening an account already settled is somewhat different. (United States vs. Bank Metropolis, 15 Pet. R., 401; 2 Op., 515; 3 Op., 461; 12 Op., 386; 13 Op., 297.)

The settlement made by the Sixth Auditor is affirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST COMPTROLLER, August 12, 1881.

the Postmaster-General, dated December 1, 1860, page 2, in which he states that the coach and inferior modes of service had been merged into one class styled "star," or with "celerity, certainty, and security." A like explanation is given of the use of the word "star" as applied to mail service, in a glossary of words having a technical meaning in the postal service, appended to the postal laws and regulations of 1879.

The term "star routes" is first used by Congress in an act approved July 12, 1876, making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, in which an amount is appropriated for transportation on star routes, and by steamboats and all other than railroad routes. (See United States Statutes at Large, volume 19, pp. 78, 79.

The Revised Statutes provide as follows:

"SEC. 3960. Compensation for additional service in carrying the mail shall not be in excess of the exact proportion which the original compensation bears to the original service; and when any such additional service is ordered, the sum to be allowed therefor shall be expressed in the order and entered upon the books of the Department; and no compensation shall be paid for any additional regular service rendered before the issuing of such order.

"SEC. 3961. No extra allowance shall be made for any increase of expedition in carrying the mail unless thereby the employment of additional stock and carriers is made necessary, and in such case the additional compensation shall bear no greater proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation in the original contract bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution.

"SEC. 3965. The Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post-roads established by law, as often as he, having due regard to productiveness and other circumstances, may think proper."

* Thus the contract price for a year for one trip per week, $699; one-fourth for three months, $174.75; 50 per cent. for expediting one trip, $87.37. These two latter sums are allowed by the Sixth Auditor. The amount allowed for expedited service by order of February 25, 1881, per annum $2,446.50, equal per quarter to $611.62 and claimed by contractor, of which disallowed $524.25 and allowed $87.37.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, which will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That wherever the words "Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department" occur in any law the same shall be construed to mean "Sixth Auditor of the Treasury," and hereafter that officer shall be known in all official transactions as the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEELLE. I offer now the following amendment, which I have already suggested, to come in after the word "Auditors," in the thirteenth line of the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Auditors," in the thirteenth line of the first section, the words "except money-order accounts and accounts of postmasters."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 13.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The Speaker appointetd ellers.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. PEELLE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 43.

So, no further count being demanded, the bill was passed.

Mr. PEELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 5388) to fix the times for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Ohio; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

BIDS FOR MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up now for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6719) to amend section 3953 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 3953 of the Revised Statutes as requires that bidders on a class of mail-routes therein described shall accompany their bids with a certified check or draft be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter no bidder for mail service on any route shall be required to furnish or file with or accompany his bid or proposal with a check or draft.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. May I ask what is the object of this bill?

Mr. LACEY. Under the present law all bidders upon routes where the annual compensation on such routes exceeds at the time of letting the sum of $5,000 are required to accompany their bids with a certified check or draft, payable to the order of the Postmaster-General upon some solvent national bank for an amount not less than 5 per cent. of the annual pay upon such route, which is a guarantee that they will enter into the contract in case the bid is accepted. This law has proved to be perfectly worthless to the Department, and has served to exclude local bidders who could not furnish certified checks at points where there are no national banks.

This provision as now presented is in the interest of competition, giving the local bidders an opportunity to compete with professional bidders. The present law has not realized anything in the way of security or value to the Government. These checks are returned to the maker of them as soon as the contract is executed and the person making it enters upon the practical performance of the work.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As the law now stands bidders are required to furnish bond as security, the sufficiency of the security to be determined by the proper officer of the department?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is deemed sufficient security by the Department?

Mr. LACEY. That is the fact.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is deemed by the Department and your committee as sufficient?

Mr. LACEY. That is deemed as sufficient and is the only security that has proved of any practical value to the Department in the past history of these transactions.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. GAVETT.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 679) for the relief of William A. Gavett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William A. Gavett, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as the said Secretary shall be satisfied is equitably due, if anything, for the information and services of the said Gavett in the case of James C. Harris, of Tennessee: Provided, That the amount paid shall not exceed $2,650.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. In accordance with the notice I gave two days ago I now report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the final post-route bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be put upon its passage.

The being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 6804) to establish post-routes was received and read a first and second time.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course there is no legislation in the bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is asked whether there is any legislation in the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no legislation in it.

The reading of the bill in extenso was dispensed with.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IOWA SOLDIERS' REUNIONS.

Mr. McCOID, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient quartermaster's depot or arsenal, to be used at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882, such cannon, tents, muskets, &c., as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, muskets, &c., to be returned after holding of said reunions in like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the arsenal and depot shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Iowa, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKELL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REED. I should like to have permission to pass two bills that are needed for the public business of the Departments.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like the gentleman from Kansas to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HASKELL. I must ask for the regular order. But before it is proceeded with I ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs may have three and a half hours on Tuesday, being the same favor as was given to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. My object in making this request is that in taking up the business of the Committee on Indian Affairs to-day we may not be concluded with a session of an hour or half an hour.

The SPEAKER. There is a special order setting apart a day for the consideration of such business as may be indicated by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL?]

Mr. RANDALL. That is to say, he has now three and a half hours, and he proposes to take part of that time to-day and part on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to take the remainder of this day and to have enough of Tuesday next to make up one entire day.

Mr. RANDALL. That I understand is in accordance with the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution gave the committee one day. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HASKELL. I am besieged on all hands with requests to yield for various matters; and if some one else does not call the regular order, I am willing to yield for a few minutes for little matters of reference.

The SPEAKER. If it is confined to matters of reference the Chair will only recognize such.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Gentleman can introduce their bills on Monday.

Mr. REED. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is recognized to call up such measures as come within the provision of the special order, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, June 14, after the morning hour, be set aside for the consideration of such business as may be indicated by the Committee on Indian Affairs, not to interfere with the consideration of general appropriation bills; this order to continue and be in force from day to day thereafter until executed.

TITLE FROM SENECA INDIANS.

Mr. HASKELL. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York, in the manner provided by their constitution, to quit-claim to the Wildwood Cemetery Association of the village of Salamanca and State of New York, duly organized under the laws of said State, not to exceed thirty acres of land within said village of Salamanca, as defined in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 19, 1875, for cemetery purposes: Provided, That a suitable plot of land within said Wildwood Cemetery be set aside for interment of Indians resident on the Allegany reservation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION, COLORADO.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 698, relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all that portion of the Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Utes be, and the same is hereby, declared to be public land of the United States, and subject to disposal, from and after the passage of this act, in accordance with the provisions and under the restrictions and limitations of section 3 of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, chapter 223, except as hereinafter provided, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, at the earliest practicable day, ascertain and establish the line between the land mentioned in section 1 of this act and that now or lately occupied by the Southern Utes in said State; and for that purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500.

SEC. 3. That all entries, settlements, or locations heretofore made, under any law of the United States, by duly qualified persons, upon a strip of land extending northerly and southerly, not exceeding ten miles in width, within that part of the Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians, and bounded on the east by the one hundred and seventh meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, shall legally date from the time they were respectively made; and the rights of said persons shall be in all respects the same as if the lands had been legally subject to their claims when the same were initiated: Provided, however, That if homestead entries have been made on said strip, the lands so entered shall be paid for in cash, after proof which would be satisfactory under the pre-emption laws: And provided further, That none of said lands shall be disposed of for any consideration other than cash, nor for a less price than $1.25 per acre.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AUDITING INDIAN ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up for consideration from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to examine and audit all the unpaid claims heretofore filed in the Departments for services rendered and supplies furnished under directions of the Indian Bureau or any of its agents; and in cases where said services and supplies are found to have actually been applied to the benefit of the Indians to report to Congress the balances equitably due on said accounts respectively, notwithstanding no sufficient appropriation existed.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to have some explanation of that bill.

Mr. HASKELL. And I should be very glad to make it, because it is a very important bill. It has been found in the offices of the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller of the Treasury Department that in the auditing of Indian accounts, under the somewhat complicated system of conducting Indian affairs, there is a disagreement, merely upon legal technicalities, between those two offices and the findings of the Indian Bureau.

There are some sixty-nine or seventy Indian agents, a great many of them managing Indian affairs. When they are first appointed they are of course unfamiliar with the great volumes of the statutes regulating the auditing of accounts in connection with Indian business. It often occurs that these accounts are suspended in the auditing offices of the Treasury Department because of mere legal technicalities, which those offices of course must take note of. In the expenditure of the money involved in the accounts the Indians have received the absolute and full benefit; the goods have been furnished them and the work has been done. The Auditor, Comptroller, and everybody familiar with the business can see that no wrong has been perpetrated upon the Indians, and that the money is due.

This bill provides that the officers of the Treasury Department may audit these accounts in cases, to use the language of the bill, "where said services and supplies are found to have actually been applied to the benefit of the Indians." Those officers are authorized to audit those accounts for the equitable amounts found due and to report the facts to Congress.

Mr. SCALES. Can it possibly embrace claims for Indian depredations?

Mr. HASKELL. It cannot.

Mr. SCALES. How far back does it extend?

Mr. HASKELL. Only to accounts for supplies and labor furnished to Indians under treaty stipulations.

Mr. SCALES. For what time?

Mr. HASKELL. I have not the bill before me, but it is an open order to the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller to audit all the claims which they believe in equity should be audited, and to report the facts to Congress.

Mr. SCALES. Then it may go back for fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. HASKELL. Unless barred by some statute. It provides for certifying the claims to Congress with all the facts in the case.

Mr. SCALES. Is it recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HASKELL. It is. I have here a letter from Commissioner Trowbridge, and also one from Commissioner Price, which I will incorporate in my remarks. I have also here a letter from the Second Comptroller of the Treasury Department, which I will incorporate.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 23, 1880.

SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, in which you inclose, at the request of Hon. J. Whiteaker, the bill (H. R. No. 3458) "to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau," and in which you request an expression of the views of this office on the bill and the proposed amendments noted thereon.

In reply I have to state that the legislation proposed by the inclosed bill is a just and necessary measure and would afford relief to a large number of creditors who have filed valid claims, and have been deprived of their just dues for services rendered and supplies furnished for the Indian service for want of necessary appropriations to meet the same.

Regarding the proposed amendments, as indicated in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, I respectfully recommend the following, namely: that lines 6, 7, and 8 be changed to read "in the fiscal year 1879 and prior years," and in line 9 to insert the word "its," so as to read "or its agents."

I would also recommend that the title of the bill be amended by adding the words "and accounting officers of the Treasury," for the reason that a large percentage of the claims in question are now in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury for examination.

The bill is returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE,
Commissioner.

A. H. GALLAWAY,
Clerk House Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 17, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to be in receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, inclosing bill (H. R. No. 1364) "to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury," which bill you state has been referred to you by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and in which you request a report as to whether the said bill is a just and necessary measure, and which, if enacted into a law, would afford relief to creditors of the United States who have filed valid claims before the Interior Department, and who have been deprived of their just dues for services rendered and supplies furnished for the Indian service. In reply I have to advise you that the legislation proposed is in every sense a just and necessary measure, and, if enacted into a law, would afford relief to a large number of creditors who have been deprived of their just dues for services rendered and supplies furnished for the Indian services, under authority of this bureau or its agents, on account of limited appropriations made by Congress. On the 23d day of March, 1880, my predecessor recommended similar legislation, as set forth in bill H. R. No. 3458, and the views therein expressed are concurred in by me. I respectfully recommend the following change in the title of bill 1364, namely: Strike out after "unpaid" the words "accounts in," and insert in lieu thereof the words "claims against." The inclosures submitted with your letter are respectfully returned.

Very respectfully,

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

Hon. GEORGE AINSLIE, House of Representatives, City.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing House bill 1364, entitled "A bill to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts of the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury," and requesting a report or an opinion as to whether the legislation therein proposed is a just and necessary measure to afford relief to the creditors of the United States who have filed valid claims or have been deprived of their just dues.

In reply I respectfully state that there are many claims pending in the office of the Second Auditor and in this office for goods furnished and services rendered under direction of officers of the Indian Bureau, which remain unpaid because it does not appear that any appropriation existed at the time the goods or services were ordered. The most of these accounts are for supplies which have been furnished in good faith and for the benefit of the Indians; and it is believed that it is unlawful to audit and allow these claims without further legislation.

I think that justice to the claimants and to the United States demands their payment, and that the legislation proposed by the said bill will afford the needed relief.

I therefore reply in the affirmative, that I think the legislation proposed is a just and necessary measure.

Very respectfully,

W. W. UPTON.

Hon. GEORGE AINSLIE, House of Representatives.

Mr. SCALES. I would inquire of the gentleman further if in his opinion it would not be better to fix a limit as to time, and not go back so far as this bill may go? I do not want to antagonize the bill, but I think there should be some limit.

Mr. HASKELL. I think not. I think the operation of the bill will be entirely harmless. It simply allows these two officers to audit these claims and to report their findings to Congress. Of course these two auditing officers of the Treasury Department, the Second Comptroller and the Second Auditor, will act upon their responsibility, and in the matter of auditing claims they would hardly take up any overhanging account that they did not deem was equitably due.

I think the bill is entirely safe, for when these accounts shall have been examined, when the Indian Office and the two auditing offices of the Treasury Department shall have agreed upon these accounts, they will still be for Congress to act upon. I do not think any limitation is necessary. As this legislation has been urged on Congress for some time, it might be that there would be some old claims which are most equitable.

Mr. SCALES. It occurs to me that there ought to be some limitation. But as this comes from the Indian Committee, and I have great confidence in the committee, I will not antagonize the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. It not only comes from the Indian Committee of this House but is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERTISING SALES OF KANSAS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. SPAULDING. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5003) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of certain newspapers for the advertisements of the sales of the Kansas Indian lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to such newspapers as published under previous authority of the Department the advertisement of Kansas trust and diminished-reserve Indian lands, in 1874 and 1875, the amount of their bills as rendered at the Interior Department not exceeding the regular commercial rates, and not in any case exceeding twenty-five cents per line for each insertion, payment to be made from the proceeds of the sales of said lands in the same manner as other expenses of such sales are now provided by law.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF SALT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BUCK. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation may execute a lease of the salines or salt deposits on the plains, not to exceed three in number, located on the lands of the Cherokee Nation lying west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude, in the Indian Territory, and so much land connected therewith as may be necessary for the working of the same for a period of not exceeding twenty years, with right of a highway for ingress and egress, to be reserved for such purpose and to facilitate the manufacture of salt, and the conditions of which lease shall insure the payment to the Cherokee national authorities of a royalty of not less than $1 per ton; said lease being subject to such conditions and to the proper jurisdiction of the Cherokee national legislature, and said lease and conditions subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the proceeds of such royalty from the manufacture of salt shall be an addition to the educational fund of said nation: And provided further, That said salines shall continue subject to any rights of the United States under sections 15 and 16 of the treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokee Indians; and said lease or leases shall be liable to revocation by the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation and the Secretary of the Interior for the non-performance of any of said conditions.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to hear an explanation of this bill, which seems to me a very important one to the Indians of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. BUCK. The bill simply authorizes the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to make leases of certain salt mines which have been discovered in that Territory, west of the ninety-sixth parallel. These mines are located within the unassigned portion of the lands belonging to that nation, and under treaty stipulations the United States may settle on those lands any civilized Indian tribe with the previous consent of the Cherokee Nation. This bill makes these leases subject to the provisions of that treaty.

Mr. SCALES. Does not the bill open up the Territory for as many persons as may see proper to go there?

Mr. BUCK. No, sir; it does not. It simply authorizes the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation to make leases of these salt mines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for not less than twenty years, reserving a royalty——

Mr. SCALES. Is this bill presented at the instance of the Indians themselves?

Mr. BUCK. The council of the Cherokee Nation has asked for it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It seems to me we ought not to take up and consider a bill of this importance in so thin a House. We have not been able to get a quorum to-day. It is very apparent that a quorum is not now present. It strikes me that instead of considering so important a bill this evening, the House had better adjourn. At first blush this bill would appear to open up the Indian Territory——

Mr. BUCK. The money derived from these leases is to go to the educational fund of the Cherokee Nation, and nowhere else.

Mr. HASKELL. These saline deposits in the western part of the lands of the Cherokee Nation have until recently been absolutely valueless, because there was no railroad near enough to transport the product of any operations which might be carried on for the production of salt. The roads are now in order; and the Cherokees themselves ask that they may be allowed to lease these lands for a royalty of $1 a ton, which is very high—higher than the committee thought ought to be charged. The leases are to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and are to be operative for twenty years.

Mr. BUCK. And may be revoked at any time.

Mr. HASKELL. The five civilized tribes of which the Cherokees are one have always been in the habit of regulating their own internal affairs, making leases for farm lands, &c., without coming here to Congress. But as to this western part of their reserve, it is absolutely essential that there should be Congressional or departmental action to allow them to make these leases. As these Cherokees ordinarily conduct their own business in their own way, this bill is simply in the line of that policy. It is a measure which they themselves ask for. I know of no white person interested.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to inquire whether the rights or interests of persons who may take leases are carefully guarded? The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] refers to leases of lands, &c., heretofore made in the Indian Territory. I remember that a few years ago there was very wide-spread damage done in that Territory by the action of a governor or some other high Indian official ordering out people who under leases had acquired grazing rights, saw-mill rights, and other rights upon the lands. Their mills, their lumber, their cattle, their crops, were "gobbled up." If this bill is simply a trap to decoy some more game of the same kind it ought not to be passed.

Mr. BUCK. The rights of lessees will be protected by the leases.

Mr. DUNN. There is another view of this matter. As I understand, these Indians under existing law have no power to dispose of these lands. Is it not impolitic and unwise for us now to allow them to grant leases which may run for twenty years? Before the expiration of that time the Government may change its policy; the lands may be distributed to the Indians in severalty; the Territory may be organized into a State and opened up to settlement.

Mr. BUCK. The bill provides that the leases may be revoked at any time.

Mr. DUNN. By whom?

Mr. BUCK. By the Secretary of the Interior and the Cherokee Nation itself.

Mr. HASKELL. These lands are in the Cherokee country, not in the Indian Territory proper; they are in a part of the country where Congress has already given these Indians the right of self-government.

Mr. DUNN. But the Government of the United States may change its policy.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF KICKAPOO LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 469) to provide for the sale of certain Kickapoo Indian lands in Kansas.

The bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be appraised and sold for cash to the highest bidder, after due advertisement, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person, the following-described tracts of land in the State of Kansas, reserved in accordance with the provisions of the amended eleventh article of the treaty made June 28, 1862, by and between the United States and the Kickapoo tribe of Indians, for mill-site and missionary and agency purposes, namely: The south half of section 4, township 5, range 16, and the north half of section 9, township 5, range 16, for mill-site purposes; the south half of section 33, township 4, range 17, reserved for mission purposes; lots 5, 6, and 7, section 3, township 5, range 17, and lot 6, section 15, township 5, range 17, reserved for agency purposes: Provided, That no tract shall be sold for less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case for less than $6 per acre.

SEC. 2. That the net proceeds of the sale of said lands, after deducting therefrom the expense incident to said appraisement and sale, shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Kickapoo tribe of Indians, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend the interest annually accumulating thereon, and all or any part of the principal fund, at such time and in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of said Indians: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall direct the payment of said principal sum in installments, the unpaid portion thereof shall continue to draw interest until paid.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents in fee-simple to be issued to the purchasers of the lands sold under the provisions of this act in the same manner as patents are issued for the public lands.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. DEERING. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 307) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $251,055.97, with 5 per cent. interest on $176,755.97 from April 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the Creek orphan fund, which sum has been diverted from the said fund, and is due to the Creek orphans and their heirs under the treaty of March 24, 1832: Provided, That said sum shall, in the discretion of the President, be paid to the Creek orphans and their heirs under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain who are entitled under the aforesaid treaty of March 24, 1832, and the provisions of this act, to receive the money hereby appropriated; and it shall be his duty to see that said moneys shall be paid to the actual beneficiaries under said law, the orphans and their heirs, to the exclusion of all claims by attorneys for fees, except such reasonable attorneys' fees as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior after the passage of this act: Provided further, That all bonds heretofore purchased with moneys belonging to this fund shall be the property of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to charge the sum of $69,956.68, used for general purposes of the Creek Nation, against the general fund of said nation, and said sum shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in such installments as shall not seriously embarrass the object of the annual appropriations for the support and necessities of the Creek Nation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DEERING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF OMAHA RESERVATION.

Mr. HASKELL. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with a substitute.

The motion was agreed to.

The substitute is as follows:

That with the consent of the Omaha tribe of Indians, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be surveyed, if necessary, and sold, all that portion of their reservation in the State of Nebraska lying west of the right of way granted by said Indians to the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad Company under the agreement of April 19, 1880, approved by the Acting Secretary of the Interior July 27, 1880. The said lands shall be appraised, in tracts of forty acres each, by three competent commissioners, one of whom shall be selected by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the other two shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That after the survey and appraisement of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue proclamation to the effect that all unallotted lands are open for settlement under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. That at any time within one year after the date of such proclamation each bona fide settler occupying any portion of said lands and having made valuable improvements thereon, or the heirs at law of such settler, who is a citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, shall be entitled to purchase for cash through the United States public land-office at Neligh, Nebraska, the land so occupied and improved by him, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in each case, according to the survey and the appraised value of said lands, as provided for in section 1 of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payments, that is to say: one-third of the price of said land to become due and payable one year from the date of entry, one-third in two years, and one-third in three years from said date, with interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum; but in case of default in either of said payments the person thus defaulting for a period of sixty days shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract which he has purchased and any payment or payments he might have made: And provided further, That whenever any person shall under the provisions of this act settle upon a tract containing a fractional excess over one hundred and sixty acres, if the excess is less than forty acres, is contiguous, and results from inability in survey to make township and section lines conform to the boundary lines of the reservation, his purchase shall not be rejected on account of such excess, but shall be allowed as in other cases: And provided further, That no portion of said land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case for less than $2.50 per acre: And provided further, That all land in township twenty-four, range seven east, remaining unallotted on the 1st day of June, 1885, shall be appraised and sold as other lands under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the proceeds of such sale, after paying all expenses incident to and necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, including such clerk hire as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary, shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That when purchasers of said lands shall have complied with the provisions of this act as to payment, improvement, and so forth, proof thereof shall be received by the local land-office at Neligh, Nebraska, and patents shall be issued as in the case of public lands offered for settlement under the homestead and preemption acts: Provided, That any right in severalty acquired by any Indian under existing treaties shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 5. That with the consent of said Indians as aforesaid the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized either through the agent of said tribe or such other person as he may designate, to allot the lands lying east of the right of way granted to the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad Company, under the agreement of April 19, 1880, approved by the Acting Secretary of the Interior July 27, 1880, in severalty to the Indians of said tribe in quantity as follows: To each head of a family, one quarter of a section; to each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and to each other person under eighteen years of age, one-sixteenth of a section; which allotments shall be deemed and held to be in lieu of the allotments or assignments provided for in the fourth article of the treaty with the Omahas, concluded March 6, 1865, and for which, for the most part, certificates in the names of individual Indians to whom tracts have been assigned have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as in said article provided: Provided, That any Indian to whom a tract of land has been assigned and certificate issued, or who was entitled to receive the same under the provisions of said fourth article, and who has made valuable improvements thereon, and any Indian who being entitled to an assignment and certificate under said article has settled and made valuable improvements upon a tract assigned to any Indian who has never occupied or improved such tract, shall have a preference right to select the tract upon which his improvements are situated, for allotment under the provisions of this section: Provided further, That all allotments made under the provisions of this section shall be selected by the Indians, heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the agent shall select for each orphan child; after which the certificates issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as aforesaid shall be deemed and held to be null and void.

SEC. 6. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in the preceding section by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indians to whom such allotment shall have been made, or in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State of Nebraska, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever. And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That the law of descent and partition in force in said State shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered.

SEC. 7. That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of said tribe of Indians shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State of Nebraska; and said State shall not pass or enforce any law denying any Indian of said tribe the equal protection of the law.

SEC. 8. That the residue of lands lying east of the said right of way of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad, after all allotments have been made, as in the fifth section of this act provided, shall be patented to the said Omaha tribe of Indians, which patent shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus patented for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the said Omaha tribe of Indians, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Omaha tribe of Indians, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That from the residue of lands thus patented to the tribe in common allotments shall be made and patented to each Omaha child who may be born prior to the expiration of the time during which it is provided that said lands shall be held in trust by the United States, in quantity and upon the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations as are provided in section 6 of this act, touching patents to allottees therein mentioned. But such conditions, restrictions, and limitations shall not extend beyond the expiration of the time expressed in the patent herein authorized to be issued to the tribe in common: And provided further, That these patents, when issued, shall override the patent authorized to be issued to the tribe as aforesaid, and shall separate the individual allotment from the lands held in common, which proviso shall be incorporated in the patent issued to the tribe.

SEC. 9. That the commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall receive compensation for their services at the rate of $5 for each day actually engaged in the duties herein designated, in addition to the amount paid by them for actual traveling and other necessary expenses.

SEC. 10. That in addition to the purchase, each purchaser of said Omaha Indian lands shall pay $2, the same to be retained by the receiver and register of the land office at Neligh, Nebraska, as their fees for services rendered.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman from Kansas not to press that bill in the absence of a quorum, for I shall be compelled to ask for a division on it.

Mr. HASKELL. I am left then no alternative but to withdraw it.

Mr. SCALES. I do not mean to say I shall be hostile to the bill when I come to look into it.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not wish to press it unduly.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, that will be done. I withdraw the bill for the present.

INCREASE OF COMMISSIONER'S SALARY.

Mr. BUCK. I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5010) to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that it be taken up for present consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 a year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 114) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to Indian traders.

The bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2133 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read:

"Any person other than an Indian of the full blood who shall attempt to reside in the Indian country, or on any Indian reservation, as a trader, or to introduce goods, or to trade therein, without such license, shall forfeit all merchandise offered for sale to the Indians or found in his possession, and shall moreover be liable to a penalty of $500: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any person residing among or trading with the Choctaws, Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, or Seminoles, commonly called the five civilized tribes, residing in said Indian country, and belonging to the Union agency therein: And provided further, That no white person shall be employed as a clerk by any Indian trader, except such as trade with said five civilized tribes, unless first licensed so to do by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under and in conformity to regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Interior."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. HASKELL. I am instructed by the committee to report the following resolution for adoption:

Resolved, That the clerkship of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House be, and is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation fixed at $2,000 per annum. And the Clerk of this House is directed to pay the clerk of said committee such compensation for the fiscal year 1883 from the contingent fund.

Mr. SCALES. Let that go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HASKELL. This resolution has already been before the Committee on Accounts and referred there unanimously by the action of our committee. But by reason of the failure to secure a quorum of the committee, a trouble with which many of our committees are now afflicted, it has never been reported. I think it would not be objected to by the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Public Lands, both of them smaller in the amount of business they have before them than the Committee on Indian Affairs, have been given annual clerks.

Our committee is very anxious during the recess of Congress, in view of the important legislation pending and which is now before that committee, to leave that room in the custody of a clerk during the vacation, so that these important papers will not be overhauled and disturbed. This is a matter which personally I did not press upon the committee. They were unanimously of opinion, however, that it should be done. Our committee has now some five hundred bills before it, and there is not a day that we have a meeting that attorneys and others urging various interests, rights of way and the possession of large tracts of land, are not anxious to get access to the papers to aid their investigation. As I have said, the committee is anxious to prevent the overhauling and overturning of its rooms during the recess. For that reason we desire to leave this room in the custody of a clerk. There are six hundred bills pending before the committee. I am so informed by my colleague——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the point of order is insisted upon the Chair will have to rule that this must go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SCALES. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. HASKELL. I withdraw the resolution.

ABBIE SHARP.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 306) for the relief of Abbie Sharp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deduct from any annuities due or to become due to the Sioux Indians the sum of $2,000, and pay the same to Abbie Sharp, formerly Abbie Gardner, who was captured and whose family was killed by the Sioux Indians at Spirit Lake, in the State of Iowa, on the 8th day of March, A. D. 1857.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that the House do now adjourn. We have gone far enough, I think, in this Indian business.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 28.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand a division on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 8.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. The House is too thin now to transact public business, and I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. DEERING. I would like to say a word or two in regard to this bill, which is a very meritorious one.

Mr. RANDALL. If we can get an assurance that the House will adjourn after the passage of this bill, I shall withdraw the objection I have made.

Mr. DEERING. If an explanation as to this bill is desired, I can make one very briefly, which I am sure will be entirely satisfactory to every member present.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not this bill to which I am making objection now, but I object to the few members present here to-day conducting legislation of any character.

Mr. DEERING. This is a just bill and ought to pass.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt it ought, but there are only some fifty or sixty gentlemen present and voting, and we ought not to undertake to vote money out of the Treasury without a quorum present.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want to weary the House or the members with the business of our committee unduly. That bill has been most carefully considered. Several bills of those before the committee which have received a careful and patient investigation have been selected for presentation. These are the least objectionable of all; but if the House desires to adjourn or to transact only routine business, I will withdraw the demand for the further consideration of Indian business with the understanding that on Tuesday I will avail myself of the continuing order——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to this bill, and have stated that if there can be an assurance that the House will adjourn after its passage, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. DEERING. I hope this bill will be passed. It is an exceedingly meritorious case, and I appeal to gentlemen to withdraw their objection and let it go through. If desired by the House I will explain in a moment the facts in connection with it and the necessity for its passage, which I am sure will be entirely satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the objection to this bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter mation was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair desires to submit some personal requests of members, and some resolutions which should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, for ten days, on account of important business; and to Mr. MASON, for ten days from Monday next, on account of sickness.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the House, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed; 8,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, &c., That the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 be printed; 4,000 additional copies for the use of the Senate; 8,000 for the use of the House, and 13,000 for distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I desire to make a report from the Committee—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has agreed to yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCOID: The petition of the Iowa State board of health, praying for an appropriation for the support and maintenance of the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. McLANE: The petition of E. D. Bigelow & Co. and other merchants of Baltimore, Maryland, for the appointment of a committee of Congress, to sit during the recess, to take into consideration the shipping interests of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McMILLIN: The petition of W. H. Carroll and others, for an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Cumberland River—to the same committee.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 24, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the New Jersey Society of the Cincinnati, expressing thanks for the appropriation voted by Congress to erect a monument on the battle-field of Monmouth; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have a communication from Dr. William M. Smith, health officer of the port of New York, on the subject of the necessity of an appropriation to enable the National Board of Health to continue their investigation to prevent the introduction and spread of small-pox in this country. I ask to have it read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It relates to a very important subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The communication was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

HEALTH OFFICER'S DEPARTMENT, STATE OF NEW YORK,
Quarantine, Staten Island, July 22, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I understand the civil appropriation bill has passed the House of Representatives without any provision which will enable the National Board of Health to pay their inspections of immigrants, or continue their quarantine supervision on the southern seaboard.

Allow me very briefly to say that more than two years ago I saw that small-pox was likely to be largely introduced into our country through the immigration which at that time had already assumed unusual proportions; not through any omissions of duty at our maritime quarantines, but because the period from the time of infection to that of development (four days) is greater than the average passage of transatlantic passenger steamers; thus allowing the infected immigrant to pass our quarantine and perhaps hundreds of miles into the interior while the contagion was latent, or, in other words, undeveloped.

My warnings, and the proposed remedy—to wit, the appointment of inspectors of immigrants at certain points on the great lines of travel, as a measure of interstate quarantine to detect the cases as they develop—was repeatedly urged through published articles in the New York papers and otherwise, but was unheeded until a few months since, when such inspectors were appointed by the National Board of Health. In the mean time, in upward of two hundred localities in the West and Northwest, small-pox had developed.

At the present time the epidemic of this disease is under control; but the immigration to this country continues, and is likely to increase rather than diminish in the future. The maritime quarantines may be ever so vigilant, but for reasons given cannot prevent the admission of this contagion in its latent or undeveloped condition. The failure of an appropriation for the National Board will compel the discharge of the inspectors and the abandonment of important quarantine measures on the southern seaboard.

More than 100,000 immigrants pass into the United States at Port Huron, where no medical inspection has been made until very recently.

In the interest of sanitary work, in the interest of public health, I would most earnestly urge the appropriation of such sum as may be necessary to continue the work of the National Board of Health.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. SMITH,
Health Officer, Port of New York.

Hon. E. G LAPHAM.

Mr. LAPHAM. I also present a letter from the lieutenant-governor of the State of New York on the same subject, which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Felton & Son; Chapin, Trull & Co.; John D. & M. Williams, and a large number of other wholesale dealers in liquors, of Boston, Massachusetts, praying for some provision by which the time for keeping liquors in bond may be extended from three to five years. As the Finance Committee, I believe, are still trying to find a way to give some partial relief in that line, I move that the petition be referred to that committee, and I hope it may be carefully considered by them.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of the W. W. Rockwell Post No. 125, Grand Army of the Republic, a large association of soldiers in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of House bill No. 1410, for an increase of pensions to those who have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or have suffered an equivalent disability thereto, which is being considered by the Committee on Pensions. I move the reference of the petition to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 6018) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Patents have reported a bill largely accomplishing that purpose, which is on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then let the petition lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

JOHN W. FORNEY'S ESTATE.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it does not interfere with the morning business I should be glad to call up for consideration the bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney. It is a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Claims. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the bill. There is quite an elaborate report, a very conclusive and satisfactory report, accompanying the bill made by that Senator; but I do not apprehend that it will be necessary to detain the Senate to read it. I think a very few words from the Senator from Massachusetts himself explanatory of the bill will be satisfactory to the Senate, and that it will take no time in its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill is on the Calendar?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. If this bill takes no time, I shall not object to its consideration; but I give notice that I shall object to taking up any other bill. I believe this bill is upon the same basis as the bills we have passed for Mr. Spinner and for sundry officers of the Treasury, and therefore it ought to pass.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the executors of John W. Forney $27,684.70, to reimburse the estate of Forney for losses sustained by him while Secretary of the Senate in making good the deficit in the accounts of the financial clerk.

Mr. HOAR. I can state the whole point of this matter I think in three minutes; and if the Senate will give me their attention it may save time.

Mr. Forney was elected Secretary of the Senate, as everybody knows, in 1861. The habit of his office was to keep the cash, which amounted to several million dollars in a year, which were disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate, in a safe to which a clerk known as financial clerk had the sole access. It had a very difficult combination with which he alone was intrusted. The other duties of the Secretary of the Senate took the whole time of Mr. Forney, as they did of his predecessor and do of his successor; so that what he did, and what he properly ought to do, was to appoint a financial clerk in whose integrity he could confide and give him sole access to this cash and to the safe, not reserving any access to it himself. That was what Mr. Forney did. He appointed a man of mature age, who had been teller and cashier in an important bank and who sustained a spotless reputation. Mr. Forney was entirely justified in making that selection, and was entirely justified in giving up to this man the sole charge of the accounts, which it was impossible he could keep any knowledge of himself.

It turned out, however, after about a year or a year and a half of service, that there was a defalcation. This man had been called upon suddenly to pay a large debt on which he had been surety for some friend. He yielded to the temptation and took the money from the Senate safe, expecting that by meeting the debt in that way, a bank note I think it was, he could replace it pretty soon. Being unable to do it the detection came.

Mr. Forney instantly, in the most honorable manner, mortgaged his own property and raised $40,000, which he deposited in the safe and made his accounts good. The delinquent made over to Mr. Forney all the property he had, which was not a great deal. That reduced the defalcation to about $27,000, the sum mentioned in this bill, and that Mr. Forney of course had made good in that way.

The Committee on Claims, who considered this matter very anxiously, thought that Mr. Forney was entirely free from blame and had done everything that could be done, as Mr. Spinner did in his case, with one single exception, and that created our doubt and anxiety in the beginning. We thought that Mr. Forney might have had a more frequent system of examination of the accounts of this man; that he might have had a system of bookkeeping whereby some bookkeeper should have been a check on the financial clerk, or that there should have been an examination by himself at intervals of two, four, six, eight, or ten weeks. That would not, so far as we can know, have made any difference in this defalcation unless it would have had the effect to make the man so much more in fear of early detection that it would have prevented the defalcation.

Mr. HARRIS. How long was it after the abstraction of the funds before the defalcation was discovered?

Mr. HOAR. It was several months. It was discovered by a communication from the Comptroller of the Treasury in the first instance. Still, the man expected when he took the money to be able to raise money among his friends and replace it immediately.

I have stated this point fully so that the Senate might see the weakness, if there was a weakness, as well as the strength of this case. On the whole, we thought that we ought not to refuse this reparation to Mr. Forney's family by reason of that one possible loop-hole which we can see, looking back, he might have closed. In the first place, we are not sure that it would have made any difference; and, in the next place, when he came into the office he followed the custom of his predecessors, a custom perfectly well known to the Senate. The Senate, by the way, had established this office of financial clerk and given its assent to the method of dealing with its funds. He followed the custom of all his predecessors for a great many years, almost from the foundation of the Government.

We thought, therefore, as Mr. Forney had done what everybody had done, that he was free from personal blame. He had selected a man of irreproachable character and of mature years; and he had come forward with this absolute and scrupulous sense of honor, and without raising any question in the first instance, which he might well have raised, of his liability for this money; he might have had a lawsuit and a very doubtful question. He comes in and takes the $40,000, which largely exceeds the defalcation, and puts it in the safe, so that no possible question shall arise. So we thought we ought to grant the family the relief. While it makes no difference, it gives us more pleasure to come to that conclusion from the fact that this is nearly the whole fortune (if you can call $27,000 in these days a fortune for a family in that condition of life) left by Mr. Forney to his representatives. That is the whole case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2004) to authorize the administration of oaths under the homestead laws by notaries public and by justices of the peace, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2112) granting a pension to Lewis L. Cannaday, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension to John F. Ellis, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I ask the Senate to proceed to its immediate consideration, as it is an important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report? The Chair hears no objection. The report is before the Senate, and will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. If any further explanation is necessary I shall be glad to make it. I will say that the whole bill is now agreed to, as far as the committee of conference is concerned, except section 6 of the bill, which is a matter relating to the transfer of the records of the Surgeon-General's Office and the adjustment of the new State, War, and Navy building. We were unable to agree upon the amendments to that section.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator please state that again?

Mr. ALLISON. We were unable to agree upon section 6 of the bill, which is legislation relating to the transfer of the records of the Surgeon-General's Office to the Adjutant-General's Office, and also relating to the distribution and the occupancy of the building known as the State, War, and Navy building. We have agreed upon everything else.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it help the matter if the Senate should recede from the last amendment? I believe the House is right in regard to the distribution of rooms in that building. Would that help the matter toward an agreement if we should recede?

Mr. ALLISON. It would very much, so far as the House is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would the House then agree to the other amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; they would not.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does the Senator advise?

Mr. ALLISON. My advice is another conference. I will say briefly that while I have no doubt there ought to be some reorganization of the clerical force in that large building known as the State, War, and Navy building, yet it seems to me that that ought to be left in some way to the Departments now in the occupation of that building and should not be fixed by law. Especially is that so in view of the fact that the north wing of the building is not yet completed. It seems to me that a permanent readjustment of the clerical force in that building cannot well be made until the north wing is completed, which will not be before November. The Senate conferees believe that we should leave at least for the present this readjustment to the several Secretaries having charge of the building, and if by next winter they are not willing to make a proper, economical adjustment of the clerical force in that building, then I shall be ready for one to take hold of the matter and fix it by legislation; but it seems to me it is premature to undertake to do so at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt very much whether there is authority on the part of the Executive to open the walls which it would be necessary to open for the use proposed. Is there such authority?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no authority, but the Senate agreed to that provision of the House, and not only agreed to it but insisted upon another opening; and I believe myself that there should be a complete opening on every floor of that building.

Mr. SHERMAN. My own opinion is that the State Department, when it attempts to occupy a great wing of that great building, is just like a chestnut in a great granary. I suppose there are more rooms in that building than there are clerks in the State Department. The business of the State Department under our Government is not as much as that of the smallest bureau in either the War or Treasury Department; there are fewer employés; and the idea of occupying a great building like that for the business of the State Department is ridiculous. It ought to be cured, and the House have attempted to cure it. I said nothing about it when it was pending before, though I should have been willing to vote for the House provision.

I think myself that a large portion, probably fully one-half, of the south wing of that building should be turned over to the War or the Navy Department, whichever is adjacent to it, for the purpose of allowing ample room and verge. There is no necessity for allowing three or four times as much room for a clerk in the State Department as for a clerk in any other Department of the Government.

That matter ought to be arranged; and I do not believe that the President can do it, because he will not like to undertake to decide a controversey between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of State will never surrender his part of the building because it is part of the dignity of his Department to have all that great wing. The Secretary of the Navy may insist upon having part of it, but he cannot prevail unless the Secretary of State will yield, and they will never agree. Therefore, I think the law ought to determine exactly how much room shall be allotted, giving to the State Department and giving to the Navy Department ample room and verge enough, I think to the former a little more than any other Department in proportion to its size; but I think the great body of that wing ought to be assigned to an active Department of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state the situation. The provision of the House proposes to take the fourth story of the State Department and the attic story and transfer them to the War Department. It also proposes that the north half of the east wing shall be permanently assigned to the War Department, leaving only the south half of what is known as the east wing, now the center of the building to the east, for the Navy Department. The north wing is not yet completed.

There is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that a portion of the State Department might possibly be used by the Navy Department, because the south half of the east wing is in close proximity to the south wing. The House provision requires that the War Department shall pass over from the center of the building and occupy the fourth floor and the attic of the State Department.

The Senator says that one-half of the building ought to be used for other purposes. I do not know but that he is right; I do not know that he is right; but I think it is impossible for the seventy-six men in the Senate to exercise a proper judgment in that regard. If these several heads of Departments cannot agree as to the proper and economical distribution of these rooms, then there ought to be a commission to examine and investigate the matter, and make a report. The Senate conferees made that suggestion to the House conferees. These rooms ought not to be made permanently available until the completion of the north wing. We proposed to the House conferees a committee or commission who should go into the building and make a fair distribution of the several officers in it to the several Departments with a view to economy, with a view to saving rents, because every one of our Departments here is paying rents now outside of its building.

It is a strange thing that here in the city of Washington we are paying $186,000 per annum for rents of buildings for the use of the Government. We are erecting little buildings in every part of our country costing from $50,000 to $100,000, and yet we are paying right here in the city of Washington for the use of the Government rents at the rate of 8, 10, and 12 per cent. upon the value of the buildings in this city. We believe we ought to build our own buildings here as we build them elsewhere, and we believe as the Senator from Ohio believes, that there ought to be an economical use of this great State, War, and Navy Department building, which will cost $15,000,000 when it is completed, the State Department portion alone costing nearly $5,000,000. We are no more in favor of housing there a few clerks of the Secretary of State than is the Senator from Ohio; but we believe that we ought intelligently to act upon this question, and we are not prepared, at least I am not prepared for one, to say how much of the State Department building should be surrendered.

If the State Department is not willing to surrender the just and proper proportion of that building for the use of the Navy Department if that shall be wise, or for the use of the War Department if that shall be wise, then next winter I shall be willing for one to undertake to regulate this subject by a legislative provision; but I think it is premature for us to undertake to do this thing in advance of the completion of the north wing of the building.

Therefore the conferees on the part of the Senate refused to agree to this provision in reference to the readjustment of the clerks in the building.

So far as the transfer of the Surgeon-General's records is concerned, that is a separate and distinct provision, and we were not willing to agree to a transfer of those records.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the legislation proposed by the House ignores another feature of this case which seems to me to be very important. When the building is completed there will be a wing around on Seventeenth street and a cross-section, which this legislation takes no notice of at all, but it fixes and locates these three Departments of the Government without reference to that entire wing around on Seventeenth street, and the cross-section which in accordance with the original design was all to go to the War Department. The War Department, according to the original design, would have the north end corresponding to that now occupied by the State Department and the wing on Seventeenth street and the cross-section, the Navy Department having the east section, and the State Department the south.

I think there can be no doubt, as the Senator from Iowa says, that the State Department has at present more than its proportionate part of the room, probably more than its proportionate part when the building is completed, but just how much more and just what should be the proper location, it did seem to the Senate conferees that there was not information enough to justify our fixing by statute. It seemed to us that these three officers could best adjust the matter themselves during the completion of the building by mutual arrangement, and we discovered nothing in our conferences with the three officers which led us to any different conclusion.

As the Senator from Iowa says, in advance of the completion of the north wing it is proposed to crowd the Secretary of the Navy into just one-half of the part assigned to him, involving the necessity of his going out with a portion of his clerks and hiring room. Indeed the proposition was made to him by the other branch before they inserted this provision in the bill to communicate to them what building he would like to have rented for him outside of this building. Here he is in one-half of his original assignment, crowded in in anticipation of the War Department going into the north end of the building as soon as it is completed in December, and it is proposed to keep him there and rent buildings for him outside. It seemed to us to be wise to let this matter be until the next session of Congress.

As to the removal of the records, which is a part of this amendment and which follows, the appropriation to the War Department of all this building as a part of the plan, and because this is the plan appropriating the building, that presents quite another feature. It is simply the dwarfing of the Surgeon-General's Department into a cipher and magnifying the Adjutant-General's Bureau into the entire control of almost everything pertaining to the War Department. It may be right; I have no particular knowledge of the administration of the War Department, but like the locating of bureaus in particular buildings this is matter of administration over which the Secretary of War to-day has power. If the Secretary of War, after examining the whole subject, upon his own responsibility is disposed to take everything away from the Surgeon-General and put it all under the Adjutant-General, that is his matter; he is responsible for it, and is responsible for the wisdom or unwisdom of such an administration of affairs. I am entirely willing to leave it to him.

I am one of those disposed to impose upon every executive officer of this Government, high or low, the responsibility of administration in his Department and in his bureau and give him the authority and hold him to a rigid responsibility. So I would in this case. I have no hesitation in leaving that responsibility with the Secretary of War just where the law leaves it; but to take the responsibility off his shoulders upon our own by an enactment so that he can say "it is not my doings, but yours," is to assume too largely, in my opinion, the administration of an executive branch of this Government.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to criticise the action of the conferees nor to object to any action they may have taken; but we have had this matter of public buildings and rents so far pressed upon us that it is very fortunate that this discussion has happened in the Senate so that the whole matter can be looked into.

As the chairman of the committee said very well just now, we are paying $186,000 rent annually in the city of Washington alone, independent of all the immense buildings we have erected. That $186,000 at 3 per cent., at which we can borrow money enough, is the interest on a capital of over $6,000,000. That is the principal of the sum we are paying for rent in the city of Washington.

The State Department employs only one hundred persons in all, and yet it occupies a building that cost us over $4,300,000, according to my recollection, and there is no other Department of the Government that has a building of that magnitude or that size in which there are less than five hundred persons employed, in my opinion.

It is absolutely absurd to allow the State Department to occupy a building of that size with one hundred persons all told employed, while we have to pay rent at the rate we are paying. Why do that in order to keep up the appearance of some sort of dignity? I go to the State Department; I go to see the chief clerk. I do not know his name. I find him sitting in a room, with bars thrown across him to keep off him the ordinary multitude, larger and better than the room of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. Ten men ought to be employed at work in that room instead of one. While I do not propose to insist on this committee doing anything on this subject, I hope the discussion will bring a resolution from the Senate instructing their Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make a careful survey of the public buildings and the way in which they are occupied, and to report to the Senate what changes can be made in their occupation; and when that is once known, let us act. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War will never surrender anything that they have now.

But we are erecting buildings, and we are paying rent for others. The officials are doing public services in the buildings. There are thirty Senators here to-day in the Senate doing the work of States who have not a place where they can by right put a desk or sit down to write a letter except here in this Chamber where they are annoyed by everybody who sees fit to come in. Resolutions have been offered to give us clerks. What is the use of giving me a clerk? Where can I send him? It is against the rule to have him sit at my desk, and I have no other place where I can put him. I cannot impose on the chairman of my committee by sending a clerk to the committee-room and disturbing the consultations of committees of conference, &c.

We are cramped for room in this Capitol, and these gentlemen just seem to want a grand room to themselves with no more use for it than a wagon has for a fifth wheel, in my opinion; but I do not think this bill is the place to go into that question. Let us instruct our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] and others can look into it and make a disposition that will not require these different secretaries to come into conflict with each other as to their respective rights; but let Congress, the master of all of them, who represent the tax-payers of this country, who furnish the means, say what is right and what each ought to have, and require them to obey whatever law or joint resolution we may pass.

If this discussion has a tendency to bring about a thing of that kind I shall be glad. We are discussing in committee now a proposition to secure a square, as I understand, and a very fine one fronting the Smithsonian grounds, where perhaps we may erect a building that will accommodate the Pension Office, and do it for an amount of money that would not be more than the capital of one-third what we now pay as rent. Something has to be done about it. I go into the Treasury Department once in a while. There are only one hundred clerks in the State Department, and I think I have seen one hundred people crowded into one of those long rooms in the Treasury Department working from morning till night, and fans had to be put up in order to give them decent ventilation. That was perhaps before the Engraving Bureau was put in a separate building. We have given others extreme latitude in order to have all the rooms they want. We ought to take the responsibility ourselves.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BECK. Very well.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the new War, State, and Navy building have room enough to accommodate all the employés?

Mr. BECK. I think there will not be. We have Winder's building and we have added largely to the force of the Surgeon-General's Office in connection with pensions and many other things, so that there will not be room enough for all. I cannot answer the question accurately, but I do think we ought to have a report about it and we ought to take the responsibility of settling it ourselves. I want the Department where foreign ministers and distinguished strangers go to be a credit to us; but I do not want the room wasted unless some proper committee say they are entitled to all there is, and if they do report that they need it all they ought to have it all, and I expect to vote as they say; but I want information.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senate conferees adhere to the action of the Senate in regard to the disposition of the records in the Surgeon-General's Office. I regret very much that the conferees of the Senate adhered to that position. I think it is wrong, radically wrong. Those records belong of right and properly in every military sense to the Adjutant-General's Office, and they ought to have been there all the time.

Mr. ALLISON. Then let me ask my friend why they are not placed there. Why is Congress asked to intervene in respect to it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply because Congress has recognized their existence at the other place, in the Surgeon-General's Office, where they do not belong. They relate to the personnel of the Army. They are just as much a part of the records of the Adjutant-General as the company muster-rolls are, and they ought to be there. It is to the interest of the public service, it is to the interest of the pensioners, it is economy, it saves time, it saves labor if they are put there, and I trust that the Senate will instruct their conferees to recede on that point.

Now you write a letter to the Adjutant-General for the record of a soldier. He comes to the fact that he went to his regimental hospital, and he has to stop and send a letter from his department to the Surgeon-General's and probably wait two months before he can furnish the man's record. If that record was in the Adjutant-General's Office, he could have made out the complete record and furnished it to the Pension Office in a very short time. Here you are consulting two departments, independent departments, for the one thing, the personal history and the military record of the soldier. I do trust that the Senate will understand that proposition and recede from it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What motion does the Senator make?

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate conferees on that point recede.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri if he wants to test the sentiment of the Senate on that subject to wait until we get through with this report. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments No. 330 and so on which the conferees could not agree on, and agree to the report as made so far as it discloses an agreement. After that is done, if the Senator from Missouri wants to test the sense of the Senate, he can then move to recede from amendment No. 330 because that matter is all in a single amendment. If the Senate recede there will be nothing upon that subject before the further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate adopt the report of the committee of conference, and further insist upon its amendments on which the conferees have not agreed.

Mr. DAWES. The question is, will the Senate adopt the report, and after that there is a matter of difference left to be further acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move to insist upon the amendments of the Senate mentioned in the report on which the committee have not agreed, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate recede from the amendment in regard to the records of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. ALLISON. That is No. 330.

Mr. LOGAN. I admire consistency in the action of the Senate, and I hope the Senate will not agree to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Missouri for this reason: the other day when a conference committee made just exactly such a report as this on the river and harbor bill, after long debate a vote was taken on the report, and it was made just exactly as in this case. I arose then and asked that the Senate vote in favor of insisting on the other amendments that had been disagreed to, and it was held that I was out of order, and the Senate utterly refused to take any action, on the ground that I was out of order.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] shakes his head. The RECORD will show the fact. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] insisted that the vote of the Senate was an affirmation of the report of the conferees, and that no further action was necessary. Is not that true?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; my understanding was that the motion of the Senator included also an insisting on the disagreeing votes which had been agreed to. Therefore the Senate was voting on a question already passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly the motion now. The motion is that we agree to the report.

Mr. DAWES. But there is one question open upon which that motion can be made.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand it just exactly as I said the other day. It is all right, of course; but I merely wished to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it makes a very great difference who makes the motion.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that there is one question of disagreement between the two Houses and upon that the Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate insist. Any other Senator can move that the Senate recede, and that motion would take precedence of the motion of the Senator from Iowa, because a motion to recede, if carried, brings the two Houses together, and any motion that has a tendency to bring them together takes precedence of a motion which keeps them apart. So that it is perfectly in order for anybody to move now that the Senate recede from its disagreement, and that will take precedence of the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LOGAN. I only want to understand the rules of the body.

Mr. HARRIS. The question is, will the Senate recede from amendment No. 330 on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the first question. The question is, Will the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 330?

Mr. HAWLEY. Is an affirmative vote here equivalent to a vote removing these records from the Surgeon-General's Department?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am emphatically and totally opposed to it. It would be a great mistake in administration in my humble judgment. The Surgeon-General's Office contains car-loads of books which are the returns of hospitals, alcove after alcove running up in tiers to the ceiling, a magnificent and pathetic record of this war, such a monument of it as I cannot see anywhere else, made by surgeons every page of it, managed by surgeons now, and if anything in the world belongs to the Surgeon-General's Department more than that I do not know what it is, or anything so much as that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator to tell the Senate how many surgeons have ever been inside of that place or given one particle of attention to the management of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a very capable and admirable surgeon there every day supervising it.

Mr. COCKRELL. How long has he been supervising?

Mr. HAWLEY. He lives about there and in there—the new officer detailed to take charge, who succeeded to the very eminent and able Dr. Woodward, who had personal charge and command of it, who is now, I am sorry to say, very much broken down in health, a man capable of holding any position in this Government or any other government in the medical department. The new surgeon is a very able and capable man, and is becoming a thorough master of the office, and the bureau is in thorough order and organization and working admirably, and has been so far as its force would allow it to work.

Now, as to the effect of taking it over to the Adjutant-General's Department, it will be necessary to have surgeons in charge of it, and the same routine of work will go on. There is simply a reference to the medical records in the investigation of pension cases, and in all or nearly all the cases a reference to the medical department, and whether you say that it is under the Secretary of War or under the Surgeon-General is an immaterial thing; it is a matter of words. It is now a part of the War Department, under the command of the Secretary of War.

I see no imaginable gain to be made by the change. The only change I would make anywhere in that work would be to take from the Adjutant-General's Department now a few regimental hospital records which were turned in with the returns of the regiments, and which ought to go with the general hospital records. I do not believe there can be any possible improvement by this transfer. I see no sense in it; I see no object in it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has not the Secretary of War the authority to transfer these records from one bureau to another if he sees fit?

Mr. LOGAN. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt whether he has.

Mr. LOGAN. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question has been asked two or three times whether the head of a Department has a right to transfer clerks, &c., from one bureau to another. Unless that power is expressly given by law, he has it not. It is given to the Secretary of the Treasury, and is exercised daily; but here for year after year appropriations have been made for clerical force in the Surgeon-General's Office. I doubt very much whether the Secretary of War, unless he has some express power, has a right to transfer those clerks which by law are located in the Surgeon-General's Office into the Adjutant-General's Office. I do not believe he has.

Mr. ALLISON. I will call the attention of the Senate to section 166 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

> Each head of a Department may from time to time alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his Department of the clerks allowed by law, as he may find it necessary and proper to do.

I think there is no trouble about transferring clerks.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would give authority expressly.

Mr. ALLISON. That section is expressly saved in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 330.

Mr. ALLISON. An affirmative vote leaves the House bill so far as these records are concerned, and the clerks follow them.

The motion to recede was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate insist on the residue of its amendments not settled by the conference report, and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 1774) authorizing the sale of the land and premises formerly occupied as a site for the post-office in the city of New York.

The message also announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 984) increasing the pension of Emma H. Collins;

An act (S. No. 1201) granting a pension to Jacob Nix;

An act (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe; and

An act (S. No. 604) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask that the tax bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Chair to lay certain House bills before the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. No. 859) regulating rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices;

A bill (H. R. No. 3255) to amend sections 269 and 277, and to repeal section 270 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4951) to punish postmasters for making false certificates of the arrivals and departures of mails;

A bill (H. R. No. 4954) making certain violations of the postal laws a misdemeanor;

A bill (H. R. No. 4958) making it an offense to personate a post-office inspector;

A bill (H. R. No. 4961) to amend section 5480 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6719) to amend section 3953 of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6804) to establish post-routes.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 306) for the relief of Abbie Sharp;

A bill (H. R. No. 307) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund;

A bill (H. R. No. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5003) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of certain newspapers for the advertisements of the sales of the Kansas Indian lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 5010) to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882 was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That bill should go to the Committee on Claims; but they having reported a similar bill I ask that this bill lie on the table until to-morrow, when I shall ask to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will let the bill lie on the table until to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that——

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from Vermont has his motion put, I appeal to him to give way in order that the naval appropriation bill may be taken up. The House of Representatives evidently has waste time upon its hands waiting for appropriation bills. The revenue bill now has run ten days, and has made, and when we last adjourned was making, very slow progress. I hope that the Senator may be willing to give way this morning in order that the naval appropriation bill may be taken up with the understanding that when that is pushed through as rapidly as is possible we shall at once return to the revenue bill and finish it. I ask the Senator whether he is not willing now to do that?

Mr. MORRILL. I am not, Mr. President, for the reason that I want to push this revenue bill to-day and ask the Senate to finish it. If the Senate should take hold of it with an earnest purpose to abandon those amendments that are proposed by those who do not expect them ever to be incorporated into the statutes of the country we can soon finish it. We can as well finish it to-day as take longer time, and if the bill is treated with the usual courtesy that the Senate is in the habit of treating a bill of its importance we ought to finish it to-day; and so far as work is concerned, I am sure that the bill will give the House as much work when it is returned as the naval bill will.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator in every way possible will push this bill, by endeavoring to limit debate, or by sitting it out at night, or in any way that will bring it to a focus; but I feel bound to say to him that unless some appreciable progress is made with the bill within the next twenty-four or forty-eight hours, I shall feel constrained to test the sense of the Senate upon the proposition of taking up the naval appropriation bill and finishing that and then returning to the revenue bill. If the Senate goes on and makes progress, that is another thing.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senate to allow me to have a motion decided. I introduced the other day a bill to construe section 2 of what is commonly known as the Chinese bill, and I asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion was the motion of the Senator from California to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; but I hope the Senator from California will allow it to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and will not ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is an important bill, construing a section of the law, which ought to go to the Judiciary Committee. I should like for it to go at least where it might have some friend. I will not say friends, but some friend at least, and for that reason I would rather it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I hope the Senate will agree that it have that reference, so that it will be reported back to the Senate at some time.

Mr. MORRILL. I will give way if it involves no debate.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish any debate. It will make no difference in reference to the views of the Senate where it goes.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from California informs me at once that there will be a debate about it.

Mr. LOGAN. Debate on what?

Mr. MORRILL. On the Senator's motion for reference.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not see why there should be any debate on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont declines to withdraw his motion. The Senator from Vermont moves that the regular order of business, which is the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, be postponed with a view of taking up the tax bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a bill upon the table which has almost the status of a privileged question; that is the bill to print the reports of the census. I wish the Senator from Vermont would allow that to be taken up.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot this morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, I will appeal to the Senator to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that the Senator from Vermont has control of the business here. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to insist on his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Vermont is pending.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to say to the Senator from Vermont, and to the Senate, too, that the Senator from Vermont will not be able to confine the debate on this revenue bill by an intimation that amendments are offered here for the mere consumption of time or without the expectation of their ever becoming a part of the law of this country. So far as I know, that intimation is entirely gratuitous. I believe that no amendment has been offered to this bill that has not been offered in good faith, and he may expect to have these amendments asserted upon the idea that they are offered in good faith, and that they deserve to be debated and the country to be informed of their merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HALE. I give notice of an amendment to the revenue bill, and ask to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Illinois that when the order of business of receiving resolutions is reached the motion to refer his bill can be entertained then. That point has not been reached to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield for what I do not think will take ten minutes to consider, the bill to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion. It was under consideration and was about to be voted upon the other day when the Senator interposed his motion. I am satisfied now that it will pass without further discussion.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator does that with profound gravity, but he has already seen that other Senators with really important measures have had to be refused, and therefore I shall have to refuse him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; that it further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill numbered 330 to 337, inclusive, insisted upon by the Senate, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. G. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, the managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 21st instant, for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No 6723) to repeal all laws which require the inspection and measurement of wood brought to the city of Washington for sale; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1620) to authorize the construction of a street-railway and wagon-road bridge over the Rio Grande River, between the city of El Paso, Texas, and Paso del Norte, Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose;

A bill (H. R. No. 4174) for the erection of a public building at Marquette, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4178) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. MAHONE, to insert, after the word "thousand," in line 10 of section 3, the following:

That on and after the 1st day of January, 1883, there shall be levied and collected upon all snuff manufactured of tobacco, or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use; and upon all chewing and smoking tobacco, fine-cut, cavendish, plug, or twist, cut or granulated, of every description; on tobacco twisted by hand or reduced into a condition to be consumed, or in any manner, other than the ordinary mode of drying and curing, prepared for sale or consumption, even if prepared without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed or sweetened; and on all fine-cut shorts and refuse scraps, clippings, cuttings, and sweepings of tobacco, a tax of 8 cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask unanimous consent to take up a little bill which will occupy but a moment. I am obliged to be out of the Senate a good deal. It is a House bill——

Mr. INGALLS. Why not ask unanimous consent to take up the naval appropriation bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa must appeal to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood that the bill of the Senator from Vermont was up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The revenue bill is up.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask, pending that, unanimous consent to take up a bill which will occupy but a single moment.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall be compelled to refuse, because I have refused six or eight other equally meritorious cases.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think the Senator has heard my case. I will take an opportunity at a later hour in the day to ask consent for it.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the bill the Senator from Iowa desires to take up?

Mr. ALLISON. A little bill for a poor old citizen of my State, who is likely to die before the bill is passed.

Mr. INGALLS. He will die of old age before it is passed if he waits for final action on this revenue bill. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE.]

Mr. MORRILL. A single word in relation to that amendment; I believe the yeas and nays have already been ordered on it. The question arises at once whether we are to consider tobacco as the most meritorious of all articles, in either the internal-revenue list or the tariff, upon which a reduction should be made. The question is whether we shall reduce on tobacco, and dealers in tobacco and cigars, the amount to the extent of about $21,000,000, namely, $1,137,000 on dealers; on cigars and cigarettes a little over $6,000,000; and on tobacco $13,000,000 and over, making in round numbers about $21,000,000 that is proposed to be reduced on tobacco. I suppose if the other side of the Chamber shall vote solid with one or two on this side of the Chamber they can carry even an amendment of that character. They must take the responsibility.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I understand the amendment now before the Senate proposes to reduce the tax on manufactured tobacco to 8 cents a pound. I am not at all sure but that if all the safeguards upon the collection of the tax had been steadily maintained, by diminishing the tax 8 cents a pound, the production of tobacco would be encouraged, people believing that it is a very profitable crop; and under later discoveries and the adaptation of new soils to its production we could have afforded as a matter of revenue to diminish the rate of the tax, and have reasonably expected to maintain the aggregate of the tax growing out of the increased production. But, sir, on Saturday the Senate saw fit to adopt two amendments; one allowing any grower of tobacco to sell at retail to whom he pleases, without tax or license, tobacco to the value of $100 per annum. Next to that another amendment was carried allowing persons engaged in the employment of numbers of hands, to sell to them tobacco in the shape of supplies, not exceeding one hundred pounds per annum.

It is obvious that the withdrawal of the restriction upon the retail sales by non-licensed persons of this commodity is going to bring a large amount of untaxed tobacco into competition with taxed tobacco. The manufacturer is placed under more stringent regulations as to his business than is the producer or the dealer. The manufacturer's warehouse is open day and night to the knock of the revenue official. The capital he has involved, the machinery he has there, everything makes him thoroughly responsible for the slightest evasion or attempt to evade the revenue tax, and therefore it is fully and thoroughly paid by him. My own belief is that these amendments have been upon the side of mercy and kindness to a very poor class of people, but these feelings have been indulged in at the cost of the collection of the revenue.

I have heard many statements of the cruelty, of the hardship upon an exceedingly poor class of people, who in distant places, in remote and secluded spots grow their little patches of tobacco, and then if they sell them or exchange them for their necessities they are liable to be caught up, dragged a great distance, held for hearing, subjected to trial, and even if they are not convicted, they are almost ruined by the expense of the litigation. There is not a Senator within the hearing of my voice but who has himself, if he lives in a tobacco-producing region, witnessed exceeding hardship upon old women for retailing or attempting to retail either the raw leaf tobacco or a certain crude manufacture of it twisted into a shape that enabled it to be used.

I did not vote for those amendments on Saturday. My sympathies were with that class, and yet at the same time I looked upon it as a business proposition. If we impose this tax upon our manufacturers we are bound to see that they are protected against those who shall otherwise evade it. However, the Senate has seen fit to vote otherwise, and as we now stand, as I say, $100 worth of tobacco may be sold by any man who grows it; and who shall determine or can determine when the maximum of $100 has been reached? Who shall say whether the man who supplies his hands has sold them more than one hundred pounds? He keeps no books; the law requires none. It is impossible to watch him; it is impossible to follow him. Therefore I say that it is obvious that two very important leaks have been created in the collection of the tobacco tax by the amendments that have been adopted.

For that reason, and believing that the revenue will be materially diminished thereby, I shall not vote for a further reduction of the rate. I shall vote to maintain the 12 cents per pound that was agreed upon by the Senate a few days ago. But for these two amendments my judgment would be to vote for the 8 cents per pound; but looking at the matter from my point of view, which is simply a point of view of duty to the Treasury, to maintain our revenues at such a point that there shall not be embarrassment for the necessary appropriations and expenses of this Government, I cannot sustain the pending motion. If, after the trial of time, the working of these two new amendments and the working of the 12-cent tax, it shall be found that the internal revenue of $47,000,000 is maintained, or is approximately maintained, I shall be glad to vote for a reduction of the tax.

There are many features of the internal-revenue system which are to me most repulsive, most objectionable. Their inquisitorial features and the manner in which they have been oftentimes conducted I have spoken of before, and I care not now here to repeat what I have said; but standing where we do now, as I hope, upon the dawn of a material reduction in our taxes upon imports and a readjustment of the tariff of the United States to suit the modern discoveries and the present condition of manufactures and trade, I shall not vote to reduce the tobacco tax below the amount fixed by the Senate the other day at 12 cents a pound.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it appears to me that it would be just as sensible to expect to retain water in a sieve as to collect revenue from tobacco with the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and that of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MOR-

GAN] left in this bill. It was my purpose to vote for a reduction of the tax to 8 cents a pound before these amendments were adopted; but the only safety that the Government has in the collection of the tax on tobacco is in being able to trace the entire production from the field to the spittoon. The Government must be able to know precisely what the production is, in whose hands it is manufactured, and to whom it is finally disposed of.

Now what will be the practical effect of these two amendments? The producer and the seller under certain conditions are authorized, without the payment of any tax whatever, to sell tobacco to the amount of one hundred pounds per annum. I do not know the number of producers of tobacco; I suppose there are a great many thousands, perhaps several hundred thousand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is over a million of them.

Mr. INGALLS. Over a million, the Senator from Ohio tells me. Now, unless the Government by some system of espionage and inquisition places agents in every locality where tobacco is raised, so that they can ascertain who the persons are who are entitled to sell under these amendments and when they have reached the amount they are entitled to dispose of without tax, what security has the Government that this law will not be absolutely and systematically evaded?

I have no doubt that greater revenue would be collected if the tax could be carefully guarded at 8 cents a pound than at the figures that have been heretofore named; but with these two amendments on the bill by which the entire control of the Government over this product is practically released, I should be unwilling to vote to reduce the tax below 12 cents, although I think there is a great deal of force in what has been said about the difficulty of distributing ratably the tax of 12 cents over the production of tobacco as it is now manufactured and sold.

I thought originally that the mistake, the fallacy of those who insisted that 12 cents was an inconvenient tax, was found in the fact that they assumed that there was some necessity in the nature of things why tobacco should always be sold in packages of two or four or six ounces or multiples thereof as the case might be. That seemed to me to be an assumption that was absurd; but I am told that the manufacturers of tobacco have adopted expensive machinery by which the plug and the twist and the fine-cut are distributed almost automatically into these packages, so that to effect a change by which different multiple of ounces should be adopted and the tax distributed so that it might fall equally upon the consumer and the producer, would be enormously expensive and might be for a long time delayed.

I am unwilling, therefore, so far as my vote is concerned, to vote for any reduction of this tax that will inure to the benefit of the middleman or the retailer. If anything can be done by which the burden on the producer or consumer can be reduced I shall cordially vote for it. I should like to vote for a reductien to 8 cents, but with their amendments added to the bill I shall be unable to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, these are singular arguments made by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Kansas that they will vote against reducing the tax to 8 cents because the bill has been so amended as to allow any farmer to sell by retail to the extent of $100.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not exactly a fair statement of the argument.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The argument is that therefore they cannot afford to reduce the tax on the manufactured tobacco. Now, sir, the necessity of reducing the tax on manufactured tobacco to 8 cents grows out of that very fact. It is an absolute necessity now, in order to do justice to the manufacturers, that you reduce the tax to the lowest possible limit, because if you do not the small retail dealers at $100 apiece will drive the manufactured article out of the interior counties of the country. The very moment you allow that and remove the restriction upon the retailing of leaf tobacco, as an act of justice to the manufacturer you should really take the whole tax off; but as we cannot do that, then I say reduce it to 8 cents and you still leave the manufacturer with a tremendous competition against him. The very fact of having removed those restrictions upon the retailing of leaf tobacco makes it a necessity to the manufacturer to have this reduction. I am for both.

Now, to illustrate the hardship of this on the farmers of the country, I know one man in my State who raised tobacco. He was in the habit of putting up every season a small box for himself and a small box for his son, which he gave to him. He had a carpenter employed building him a house, and he said to the carpenter, "make me three boxes and I will give you one." He did it. The carpenter got angry after that about the settlement for building the house, and went to a revenue officer and reported on him, and it cost that man nearly $1,000 to get out of the difficulty. He sent his papers here to me, and I tried to get him a pardon, but failed to do it. This man kept his own tobacco for his own use and not for sale, but it was held to be a sale because the carpenter made three boxes and he gave him one of the boxes filled with tobacco.

Now, I want to say one word to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] On Saturday we had a controversy about the production of tobacco in Kentucky and Ohio. I knew then I was right, because, as great a financier as he is and as able and well informed as he is on the subject of finance and bonds, I knew I was a better judge than he was of the tobacco question. I sent to the Census Bureau and I have here a statement of the amount produced in his State and mine. He said that Ohio produced more tobacco than Kentucky, and took issue with me. Here is the census report, and Kentucky produced in 1880, 171,120,784 pounds of tobacco, Ohio produced 34,735,000 pounds. Thus it will be seen that Kentucky produces nearly six times as much as Ohio. Ohio is the fourth State in the production of tobacco. I merely mention this fact to sustain the statement which I made without having the statistics before me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I corrected myself, the Senator will remember, and said Ohio manufactured largely in excess of Kentucky. I was thinking of the manufacture of tobacco at the time I made the statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One hundred and seventy-one million pounds are produced by Kentucky. The next largest State is Virginia, which produces 79,000,000 pounds. The next largest State is Pennsylvania, which produces 36,000,000 pounds; and the fourth State is Ohio, which produces 34,000,000 pounds. The next largest State is Tennessee, which produces 29,000,000 pounds. The next largest State is North Carolina, which produces 26,000,000 pounds. Connecticut produces 17,000,000 pounds.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the Senator inform me of a matter of fact that he probably is familiar with or he may find it in the statistics. How many persons are employed in raising tobacco? How many tobacco-growers are there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not find it in the statistics here. I looked for that very fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the average price of ordinary Kentucky leaf tobacco per pound?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In Kentucky we have two or three classes of tobacco. We have what we call white burley, and then we have bright wrapper tobacco.

Mr. SHERMAN. What would be the average?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said the other day from seven to ten cents, I cannot tell exactly. The white burley is much higher than the shipping leaf, and the bright wrapper is much higher than either. I noticed that some white burley was sold in Louisville on Saturday as high as $40 a hundred.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am very willing to acknowledge my error in regard to the production of tobacco in Kentucky. My first idea when I rose was that Ohio was a larger tobacco-manufacturing State than Kentucky, and I thought she produced nearly equal to Kentucky or probably as much as Kentucky of leaf tobacco; but it seems I was mistaken in that, and I acknowledge the error. Ohio is a much larger tobacco-manufacturing State than Kentucky.

But I rose, Mr. President, not to deal in questions of the past, but to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of this bill. If this amendment is adopted it will be proposed by this bill to reduce the tax on tobacco nearly $21,000,000, as if tobacco was the great article produced in this country that was under distress from taxation. More than one-half of all the taxation that we can prudently throw off will have then been thrown off tobacco.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] adopted without consideration and without debate, would utterly destroy the tobacco tax, root and branch. I would not name any certain sum for the tobacco tax if it is understood that every person who chooses to raise tobacco can sell $100 worth by retail to anybody, and I will never vote for this bill or touch it under any circumstances, whatever other provisions there may be in it, if that privilege is given to the grower of tobacco. It is an utter destruction of $46,000,000 of revenue; it is an utter destruction of the manufacturers engaged in manufacturing tobacco. In Virginia it would be utter ruin to the manufacturers, as I have already warning over and over again. It would be utter ruin to our manufacturers in Ohio.

Let us look at it. How many persons are engaged in raising tobacco? I estimate it in round numbers at a million.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think over a million.

Mr. SHERMAN. Something over a million. That authority granted by this bill as amended would extend at the utmost to $100,000,000 worth of tobacco, or more than twice all the crop of tobacco in the United States, if there was no fraud. But how can you tell whether a farmer sells more than $100 worth? In the State in which I live the tobacco is largely grown by the children for spending money. A wealthy farmer in some parts of our State will give to his children a patch to raise tobacco and give the children the proceeds of that tobacco for spending money. That is a very common way. It is raised in small crops, $100 worth on a farm; probably 1,000 pounds would be considered a pretty large tobacco crop; and then it is sold to the dealers in leaf tobacco. The temptation to convert that leaf tobacco into some form that may be consumed without being manufactured is so great that it would go on to a great extent; we cannot estimate the extent. It would utterly destroy all your tobacco manufacturers.

The convenient form in which the tobacco manufacturers put their product makes the demand for manufactured tobacco. The difficulty of getting leaf tobacco, caused by the very stringent provisions of the law, makes it very important indeed that the manufacturer should be protected in his employment so that he shall have the benefit of converting this product into the manufactured article, and in that way we get the tax; but if every farmer, if every boy, if every girl in this country can raise tobacco in a little piece of land near a town and sell it at retail, it is an utter destruction of the manufacture of tobacco.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to suggest to him that the amendment as adopted gives this right of sale only to the owner of a plantation who may grow tobacco, or the tenant-farmer who rents a plantation and grows tobacco, but does not extend to the thousands and multiplied thousands of people who may be engaged as laborers in growing tobacco?

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is so, it makes it worse and worse. You give a privilege to the land-owner that you will not give to the colored man who hires a little piece of land.

Mr. HARRIS. It is extended to the tenant-farmer as well as to the owner of the land.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read the amendment:

Provided, That farmers and producers of tobacco may sell at the place of production tobacco of their own growth and raising at retail, directly to the consumer, to an amount not exceeding $100 annually.

That is the amendment adopted, that the farmer and producer of tobacco, any man, may sell at the place of production. There are 400,000 small dealers in tobacco who pay a license to carry on that employment. Every dealer may hire a quarter or a half acre of land anywhere in the neighborhood of the town where he sells, and he may raise tobacco there enough to supply his demands within the limits of that $100 without violating the law; he may raise what would sell for $400.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] says, and his recollection agrees with mine, that the average value of leaf tobacco is about 8 cents. The cheaper form of the leaf tobacco is considerably less, but for the average it is 7 or 8 cents. That tobacco is usually sold and manufactured subject to a tax of 16 cents per pound, which is 200 per cent., so that the inducement to fraud is very great. Every one of these dealers, instead of buying tobacco from the farmer, will raise the tobacco himself, and he can convert this leaf tobacco by using molasses and licorice and a few other things, as was done when we first framed the tobacco law, and make a tolerably comfortable and palatable tobacco for either smoking or chewing.

Mr. HARRIS. He would be liable as a manufacturer if he did that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. There is no manufacturing about it. The very tobacco that is put in the tobacco hogshead is twisted, and he may dip that in licorice; that would not make it a manfactured article.

Mr. HARRIS. It is so held by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. SHERMAN. You would have at the next session a law to allow him to do that. It simply shows that you cannot collect this tobacco tax except by some restriction on the use of the article in its original form, and this very proposition has been debated now for twenty years in both Houses, and was rejected in the House of Repretatives on this very bill; and yet it was adopted here by the narrow majority of one on Saturday on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] I must confess that although I had been watching this bill this amendment did not attract my attention when it was offered. I was called out for a moment. I say I cannot vote for the bill. I do not care what is in it, with this provision, without being willing to abandon the entire tobacco tax. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entirely right that if you take away from the manufacturers this protection you must, as a matter of course, repeal the tax on the manufacturer of tobacco. The logic is irresistible, and he is perfectly correct. With a tax of 8 cents the manufacturer cannot stand up against the farmer and producer who can make a kind of tobacco which would probably supply the wants of more than one-half of our people.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask, from his large experience and information on this subject, how it was that when every tobacco grower in the country was at liberty to sell his leaf tobacco to whomsoever he pleased, in any quantities he pleased, without restraint, we collected over $33,000,000 a year from manufactured tobacco, and how it is that we are to lose revenue entirely if we extend that privilege now to $100 worth a year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that notwithstanding in the first bills these restrictive provisions were not inserted, it soon became absolutely necessary, after the fullest debate, to put in these restrictive clauses, and they have been maintained and held ever since. If you could hear now the voice of the manufacturers of Richmond or Cincinnati or any portion of this country, honest men who are engaged in this business and giving you $47,000,000 of revenue, they will tell you that they cannot compete against leaf tobacco, especially when the authority is given by this very amendment to allow every man, woman, and child, black and white, in this country to produce tobacco on rented land, or land whether it is his own or not, and sell it at retail against the product of the manufacturer. Why, sir, it is an utter destruction.

But I have no criticism to make on my friend from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE,] who represents, I believe, the largest tobacco-growing, certainly the largest tobacco-manufacturing region in the country, about his proposed reduction of the tax to 8 cents; but I again beg the Senate as a whole not to throw away all the surplus revenue that we have by reducing the tax on tobacco. I have telegrams and letters without number on this subject, but I very rarely read such things in the Senate. Here is a letter from a very influential and leading citizen of Saint Louis and I have no doubt that he is well known to my friend from Missouri. I will read what he says about the tobacco tax in a letter written on the 18th of July:

I will say to you that I have conversed with many liquor, beer, and tobacco men. If petitions are before Congress for reduction in their taxes, they talk one way and act another, for they invariably tell me "we want no change; we wish to God Congress would let us alone; collect the taxes and go on and pay off the public debt, so that if trouble should ever come again we can borrow all the money we need at lowest rates." They say this everlasting agitation of a reduction of taxes paralyzes their business; people hold off from buying, and it hurts them. They want to let it rest. No one feels the tax on whisky, beer, and tobacco. If you reduce it a few cents the middlemen want the original man to return to them more than the Government takes off; but the retail consumer pays about the same. The reduction helps no one really but the middleman. The tobacco planter gets no more for his tobacco; the corn and grain man no more for his grain to be made into whisky; the (malt) barley raisers get no more for their barley and hops for beer. Those who chew and smoke will pay the same for tobacco and cigars; those who drink, the same for their beer and liquor. Neither the consumer nor the producer will be benefited, only the middlemen, and the producers say to me they don't ask any reduction, but to be let alone. There is much humbuggery about the whole thing.

This is the opinion of a very intelligent man——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio inform us what the present tax on leaf tobacco is?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no tax on leaf tobacco.

Mr. MORGAN. So I understood.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no tax on leaf tobacco at all; the tax is on manufactured tobacco. Now, here is a telegram from a firm in Ohio who say:

DAYTON, OHIO, July 19.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, United States Senate:

Result of reducing tobacco tax 4 cents will be 5 cents reduction to dealers, nothing to consumers; loss to Government and manufacturers. Trade earnestly request reduction to 8 cents or no change, and prefer latter.

COTTERILL, FENNER & CO.

That is a large establishment in Dayton. Although in my State they produce, it seems from the statistics, nearly 40,000,000 pounds of leaf tobacco; although they pay taxes on manufactured tobacco to the amount of over $3,000,000, yet no citizen of Ohio from city or country has written to me asking of me the reduction of the tobacco tax, while many of them have written and telegraphed me to let it alone by all means; and yet at the urgent demand of the two Senators from Kentucky we are called upon to surrender over $20,000,000 of revenue, at a time when we only have $40,000,000 to give up, on an article which by common consent of all nations is the one most easily taxed, most cheaply taxed, and on which the tax is felt the least. I say, sir, it is bad policy.

The two amendments which have already been adopted to the tobacco clauses, in my judgment, impair this bill and endanger it and make it very difficult to say whether or not on the whole it is not better to allow the bill to go over until the next session of Congress. Certainly, if we have to confine more than one-half the reduction proposed by this bill to tobacco, I would say a thousand times it had better be postponed until we can consider the subject differently. I had hoped that all sides of the Senate without respect to party lines—but nearly all these votes have been on party lines—might contribute in some way the greatest possible good by the proposed reduction of $40,000,000 of taxation. I was perfectly willing to vote for any proposition that might be made from either side that looked to relieving our people from a portion of the burdens of taxation. But are we now brought to this, that of this measure of relief more than a majority is to be absorbed by repealing a tax that no man in this country desires to have repealed, the repeal of which no petition has called for, the repeal of which no public sentiment demands, the repeal of which no public officer recommends, the repeal of which no committee of Congress recommends? The House of Representatives has refused it; the committee of the House have refused it; the committee of the Senate have refused it; and now at the last hours of the session upon the motion of individual Senators we are to have more than one-half of all the benefits of this bill to relieve the people from taxation confined to tobacco, when no interest requires it and no public sentiment demands it. Sir, it may be good politics, but it is not good sense.

Senators on the other side may think from the vote—I can almost refer to it as a party vote though it is not entirely so—that they can make political capital by reducing the tax on tobacco. I do not believe it. I believe the plain people of this country, as Mr. Lincoln called them, see through it. They are willing to pay the tax on tobacco, on whisky, and on beer. These are the only internal taxes that they are willing to pay, and I am willing to let those three taxes stand as they are until we can gradually reduce them as the condition of our revenue may allow. Strip your internal revenue of all other classes, even if to do so does benefit some of the banks, even if it does repeal taxes that might be kept on a little while longer with no very great injury; yet it confines the system to these three articles which in every country are the subjects of taxation. Then spread the balance of your reduction on the external taxes, and do what little good you can until the tariff commission enables us to reduce the whole system of external taxes.

That is my theory about this bill. The House of Representatives did reduce the tax on tobacco between seven and eight million dollars. They reduced the tax on cigars; they reduced the tax on dealers; they threw off special taxes to the amount of $1,137,000; they threw off the tax on cigars and cigarettes to the amount of $6,602,000; there was seven or eight million of reduction in the tax on tobacco. Why is not that enough? Why treble that by another reduction of one-half the tax on manufactured tobacco? Why make the reduction on tobacco amount to over $26,000,000 when you have but $40,000,000 to give away altogether?

I ask Senators again to look at this thing in a business light rather than as a political proposition. They may think the farmers who raise tobacco will be pleased at being relieved from this burden. I do not believe it. I do not see that they demand it; they have not asked it. They do not pay the taxes, and the tobacco raising of this country is now more prosperous than it has ever been. We export enormously of tobacco. We raise it for exportation, and the farmer gets the full benefit of the market in Europe without tax on all that is exported; and the price of the exported article fixes the price to the manufacturers in this country. That price must be according to the price fixed in the foreign market, and we now have a liberal foreign market which admits of the exportation of large quantities of American tobacco. The growth of tobacco in this country is increasing, and will increase in the Southern States as their industry becomes adapted to the new order and condition of labor there; tobacco will be a great production, greater even than it is now in the Southern States.

Some Senator said the negro naturally adapts himself to the methods of cultivating tobacco; it is a crop he likes to cultivate. Negroes succeed in cultivating it, and I believe if you just let the market alone we shall continue to be, as we are now, the largest tobacco-producing country in the world. We can go on increasing until tobacco will be like corn and wheat, one of the staples of our foreign exportation. But we had better not disturb the present relations that exist between the manufacturer of tobacco in this country and the producer of tobacco. The amendment that has been put on the bill will make that disturbance, will make loud demands from the manufacturers for relief; you will have them before the next session of Congress. They are now beginning to make loud demands. Why, sir, one of the most intelligent authorities on the tobacco question, a gentleman from Cincinnati, whom I have seen in the galleries and talked with, who knows all about this subject, says it is better to let it alone; that the tobacco tax is now well adjusted, well arranged. The manufacturers have adjusted their packages so as to give the consumer the full benefit of the reduction made two or three years ago. It is now a good business, yielding us $47,000,000 revenue without disturbing or limiting the production of the tobacco. The export of tobacco is increasing; its production in this country is increasing; its manufacture is increasing; the revenue from it is increasing. Why, then, disturb that happy relation?

My friend from Virginia again repeats the argument made the other day that because, after we reduced the tax from 24 to 16 cents, in the course of three or four years the 16 cents yielded as much revenue as the 24 cents formerly did, therefore the reduction of the tax rather benefited and increased the revenue. Why, sir, the argument that I made the other day in reply to that was conclusive, that there was a larger increase of the production of other taxes that had not been disturbed or lowered than there was of the tobacco tax. It took three or four years for the tobacco tax at 16 cents to come up to what it had produced at 24 cents, while the production of the whisky tax increased 50 per cent. in the same time. The consumption of whisky, tobacco, and beer does not depend upon your tax at all; it depends on the demand for them. That demand is regulated by an appetite that disregards the price. Nothing is more clearly established both by English experience and our own experience than that. There is a point beyond which you cannot levy a tax on whisky. We tried that, and perhaps we have the tax on whisky too high now; but as a rule the amount of the tax on these articles, if you can collect it honestly and fairly, does not cause a falling off of consumption. When you put the tax too high it may make the inducement to fraud so great that you may be cheated by the manufacturer, not by the consumer; the consumer drinks the whisky whether the tax is 50 cents, 70 cents, or 90 cents. When you have too large a margin between the original value of the whisky or tobacco and the tax you induce fraud in the manufacture, fraud in the distribution of the articles, not fraud in the consumer; the consumer drinks as much and chews as much as he ever did.

I am sorry to have detained the Senate so long, but I do hope we shall call a halt in this matter. Let us give to tobacco the same relief we give to other interests. We have provided for the reduction of the tobacco tax seven or eight million in this bill. Extend relief to other interests within the limits of what may be considered prudence and care and safety; keep within the safety line and make a fair distribution; but do not give away of our surplus revenue more than half of it on an article which is the proper source of revenue, the legitimate subject of taxation, on which the tax is more cheerfully paid and more easily collected than on any other in the whole range or gamut of taxes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I want at some time in this debate to put on record a couple of letters in relation to a matter which he alluded to the other day, and perhaps he will allow me to do it now.

Mr. BECK. Very well. I do not desire to yield the floor absolutely, but I will yield for that.

Mr. HOAR. I will not occupy three minutes in what I have to say. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] the other day caused to be read to the Senate an anonymous article, published, however, in a paper of high character and wide circulation in the city of Boston, purporting to give a description of the method of the manufacturers of knit goods, who are many of them employed in Massachusetts as well as in the other Northern manufacturing States. I was not present in my seat when the Senator addressed the Senate at that time. The charge of this communication was that these manufacturers pursued a system of the grossest fraud, palming off worthless and non-durable articles for the clothing of the people under the protection of a very high tariff.

I desire to place on record now my own statement that I am personally acquainted with a very large number of gentlemen engaged in this manufacture. They are men who maintain the highest character as citizens and business men, and while there may be of course exceptions in that business as in any other, I am willing to risk my own reputation on the assertion that there is no more honorable and trustworthy class of business men to be found anywhere on earth than the men who have built up and who now conduct these manufacturing establishments.

I desire to read two letters which I have received since the honorable Senator addressed the Senate. One is signed by a name which has done as much to make the name of the American merchant and manufacturer known to the ends of the earth as any name within the limits of the country; a name which for generations has been a synonym for commercial honor, for generosity, for large public spirit, and for a liberal political opinion; a name, I may add, which is identified with that class of opinion in Massachusetts which first resisted what our brethren in other parts of the country call our extreme opinions, and which has endeavored more than perhaps any other family in Massachusetts to promote kindly feeling and harmony of opinion on questions which have divided the country. The gentleman to whom I refer is Amos A. Lawrence, a man who is now approaching the latter part of a life which has been consecrated to public charity and beneficence. His uncle, Hon. Abbott Lawrence, was our minister to England; his father one of our most distinguished founders of institutions of learning. Mr. Abbott Lawrence in the year 1832 endeavored to induce the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia at that time to improve and develop the vast manufacturing and mining advantages which her rivers and her deposits of coal conferred upon her. Mr. Lawrence's letter reads thus:

BOSTON, July 21, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: The knit-goods manufacturers have been in great distress this season owing to the error in the printing of the revised tariff. But the expectation that Congress would remedy the evil has prevented us from being flooded with foreign goods made of free wool.

Now we are in great anxiety about the autumn business for now is the time when we buy our wool and take our order; I mean for 1883. If Congress should adjourn without action now, we shall be left helpless. The mills must stop, for the risk will be too great. In fact the foreigners would receive the orders. This interest is great here in Massachusetts, the product in the country is very nearly $50,000,000 worth.

Excuse my writing you at this time, but necessity knows no law.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

AMOS A. LAWRENCE.

Hon. GEO. F. HOAR, United States Senator.

The other letter is from a gentleman perhaps less known here, but very well known and connected with Mr. Lawrence in this business:

BOSTON, July 22, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Your telegram in reply to mine received in due time. I sincerely trust when the little knit-goods bill comes before the Senate that it will receive prompt and favorable consideration.

By the papers this morning I notice that Senator BECK made an attack upon hosiery knitters, using an article published in the Boston Sunday Herald as his text. I inclose the full article. The manner of manufacturing described being an impossibility, I did not deem it worthy of notice.

The fact is in all our mills, making the finer classes of goods and which are affected by the recent decision of the Supreme Court, no waste of any kind is used, not even the better grades made in our own mills. The mill is to sell all waste, and you can judge of its character by the prices realized, which range from 20 cents to 37½ cents per pound, according to its class.

In other words the mills to which this fraudulent manufacture was imputed by the article read by the Senator from Kentucky sell their own waste at from 20 to 37½ cents per pound:

The waste here referred to does not come properly under the waste known as shoddy, it being from yarn almost exclusively. If we were making coarse goods, it would be made use of in our own mills, but being confined exclusively to fine goods, we dispose of it.

Our mills are open for inspection and nothing would please us better than to have Senator BECK and any other Senator visit us. I promise them entré into all our mills and they can examine stock, process of manufacture, and the operatives. I am confident if they would take the trouble they would be satisfied of our honesty and desire to give the consumer a good article, even if they do prefer free trade to protection.

Sincerely, yours,

GEO. C. BOSSON.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, Senator.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when the Senator from Massachusetts called my attention this morning to the letters he received I said to him that it was but fair that these letters should appear in the REC-ORD, accompanied by such statements as he might choose to make, so as to do away with any injustice my remarks might have done to his people.

The article I read the other day was, as I then said, published in the New York Evening Post, with a long editorial accompanying it, copied from the Boston Herald, and the editor of that paper spoke of the gentleman who had been interviewed as a highly respectable Boston merchant, and then gave the interview. I thought while we were pressed quite urgently in regard to this particular item it was well the Senate should see what was said about it by men who were indorsed as respectable Boston merchants in what I regard as a respectable Boston paper, that an answer should be allowed. I know nothing about the facts; the paper has always been regarded as a respectable paper by all of us. When we come to discuss that particular part of the tax bill it can be more fully presented.

Mr. HOAR. I did not impute to the honorable Senator the indorsement of the article, and I wish to say that I am quite sure that whatever the Senator's speculative opinion may be he would be as far from making any charge which imputed want of personal integrity to any class of his fellow-citizens as any Senator in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I think I am. The Senator's colleague [Mr. DAWES] many years ago acquired the habit of scolding me, and I got so used to that from him that I do not mind it. I have been lectured by him over and over again and I do not mind it; however, we will discuss that hereafter.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me at this stage to say that my complaint of him was that he did not go and see for himself, but took advantage of an anonymous statement.

Mr. BECK. I know nothing of the facts except what is stated in that article. There are good and bad men in Massachusetts just as there are in Kentucky. Some men will cheat and others would scorn to do it. How far the facts alleged are true I do not know and never professed to know; but I have known of a great many very sharp things connected with tariff legislation, and I did not know to what extent this might be one of those things, and I sought to call attention in order to see if this was one of them.

I will state an instance. Turn to the Revised Statutes, page 479, and you will find this provision:

> Lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactures of cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for buttons exclusively, not combined with India rubber: 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Yet if you take lastings, mohair, silk twist, or any of these things not cut into patterns, solely for the use of button-makers, they have to pay 40 and 50 per cent. tax; but if they are cut into a particular shape, so that button-makers only can use them, they pay 10 per cent. ad valorem. "Buttons, barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, made in whole or part of wool, worsted, or mohair," pay under our present system when imported 50 cents a pound, and 50 per cent. ad valorem.

There is as nice a little job fixed up for one or two button factories quietly inserted into the tariff—as nice a job as can well be imagined. On all imports in the shape of mohair, silk twist, or lasting the duty is 50 per cent. ad valorem unless the material is cut into shape for the button maker, and then he gets it for 10 per cent. and he gets the tariff of 50 cents a pound on his buttons and 50 per cent. ad valorem in order to prevent competition from abroad, a prohibitory protective tariff. And the button makers are no doubt as good and as honest men as the knit-goods manufacturers are.

But we will talk about these things hereafter. I think I know where these button factories are which have been so favored and protected.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator at that point allow me to make one statement of fact which I know with reference to the knit goods manufactured in my own State?

Mr. BECK. Now please let me go on.

Mr. BLAIR. Just one fact——

Mr. BECK. If the Senator starts his line what will become of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will bear in mind that he has himself introduced the knit-goods discussion on this bill. For my own part I had abstained and had intended to abstain from it; but I wish to put on record at this point just this fact: in our own State I am assured by responsible manufacturers that out of every dollar's worth of their knit goods (I mean of the manufactured article, which of course includes the dyes, the labor, and the other materials) there is over fifty cents' worth of raw material, of wool, actual bona fide wool.

Mr. BECK. Waiving all other questions, let me say that I listened to a very remarkable speech from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] attacking an amendment I had the honor to offer in the Senate and which the Senate was wise enough to adopt, very much to the disgust of the Senator. Indeed I think anything disgusts the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont which gives any relief to anybody except the bankers and patent-medicine men, with a little salve thrown in by way of buncombe to the manufacturers of matches. They are willing to abandon their own bill and postpone it till December, indeed to let it go altogether, if we ask them to do anything except what they think in their wisdom ought to be done. If that is their opinion of their own bill they have a right to maintain it; they are welcome so far as I am concerned to abandon it whenever they see fit. I for one shall insist upon attaching to the bill such amendments as I think are for the good of the country, because I am audacious enough, irreverent enough is perhaps a better word, to doubt whether all the wisdom of this country is concentrated in those two Senators from Vermont and Ohio.

For years leaf tobacco could be sold without license or tax by the producer; indeed, up to 1872 the producer could sell to anybody he pleased. The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio both took an active part in the passage of the law of 1868, which gave the producer the right to sell to anybody he saw fit. In 1868 the law was passed and those two distinguished gentlemen had charge of it more than any other two, yet they made the law of 1868 far more sweeping in the liberality of its provisions than I propose to make it by the amendment which the Senate has adopted. I have the law of July 20, 1868, before me. Let me read the provision which the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio both agreed to and indorsed; it worked well for more than four years.

> Dealers in leaf tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay $25—

That is the law of 1868, the law which the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont framed—> and if their annual sales exceed $10,000 shall pay in addition $2 for every thousand dollars in excess of $10,000. Every person shall be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco whose business it is, for himself or on commission, to sell or offer for sale leaf tobacco. And payment of a special tax as wholesale dealer, tobacconist, manufacturer of cigars, or manufacturer of tobacco shall not exempt any person dealing in leaf tobacco from the payment of the special tax therefor hereby required. But no farmer or planter shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in leaf tobacco for selling tobacco of his own production or tobacco received by him as rent from tenants who have produced the same on his land.

Observe that the law of 1868 imposed a tax of only $25 on dealers in leaf tobacco, which they afterward made $500 in 1872 and now seek to reduce to $250. That provision which they made in 1868, you will observe, allowed any farmer, or planter, without any tax, to sell to whom he pleased, in any amount he pleased, tobacco of his own production or that he had received as rent from tenants who had produced the same on his land, without any license whatever. Senators will observe that I have restricted it greatly below their provisions in my amendment which is so much denounced by them now. I have so restricted it that farmers and producers of tobacco may only sell at the place of production; they are not to go about and peddle it over the country, but they may sell tobacco of their own growth and production directly to the consumer. Under the law of 1868 these same men could sell it to anybody, and their vendees could sell it over again as often as they pleased for profit. I limit it to sales by producer and consumer, and I limit it to $100. These gentlemen allowed producers to sell it to anybody, whether they saw fit to sell it again or not; indeed, to anybody they pleased, and what harm was done? None, as I will show.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator certainly misconstrues that clause.

Mr. BECK. I read the law, at page 152 of the Statutes at Large, volume 15.

Mr. SHERMAN. That simply relieved the farmer and planter from taking out a single license to sell his own crop.

Mr. BECK. Certainly; and my amendment only allows him to sell his own crop, his own production.

Mr. SHERMAN. But here is a prohibition in the same law that persons who take out a license can buy it even of the farmer. There is no authority to the farmer to sell at retail, as is given by the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BECK. I have read the exact language of the law. I will read it again:

> Dealers in leaf tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay $25.

Now, you demand a reduction from $500, imposed in 1872, to $250. Why did you allow them to deal at a tax of $25 when you passed the law in 1868, if prohibition was your object.

Mr. SHERMAN. That clause only provides that no farmer who raises his own tobacco shall be required to take out a license, a special tax. That is right. He sells, however, only to those who have the right to sell again, only to special dealers.

Mr. BECK. My amendment prevents him from selling to anybody who has a right to sell again.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it authorizes him to sell at retail.

Mr. BECK. Only to sell it to a neighbor for consumption, not in open market.

Mr. SHERMAN. This does not do that.

Mr. BECK. I ask why $25 was tax enough for dealers in leaf tobacco, when it is now demanded that he shall pay $500 or $250 for the purpose of prohibiting his business altogether? Let me tell the Senator and tell the Senate that under that law, which only required from the retail dealer a tax of $25, and when any farmer could sell to anybody he pleased without paying license in any amount that was infinitely more sweeping than what I propose, still under that the Government received from tobacco in 1870, $31,351,000; it received in 1871, $33,578,000, and in 1872, $33,798,000 before the present law took effect prohibiting the sales of leaf tobacco. After the present law did take effect the increase was no greater than the natural increase of population, because the tax only yielded $34,386,000 in 1873, and $33,042,000 in 1874. Two years after the new order of things it was less than it was in 1872, before the stringent legislation was imposed.

The question I ask is, if there were such frauds perpetrated when we allowed producers to sell all they raised without paying any tax to anybody they pleased, and when retail dealers could retail leaf tobacco to anybody they pleased, only paying a tax of $25 up to $10,000 worth, how was it that the Government received more revenue from tobacco in 1871 and 1872, before the imposition of the present restrictions, than they received in 1874, after the restrictions were imposed?

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. BECK. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator turn to page 145 of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. BECK. I have not the report before me.

Mr. ALDRICH. The report shows that in the year 1872 there was a tax collected on 95,209,319 pounds of manufactured tobacco at an average rate of tax of 25.81 cents. In the year following, after the change had taken place which the Senator has alluded to, there was collected on manufactured tobacco a tax on 114,789,208 pounds, nearly 115,000,000 pounds, a gain in that year of about 20,000,000 pounds, and there was a reduction in the tax the same year. The tax paid in 1873 was on an average 20.38 cents, or more than 5 cents a pound less than it was the preceding year, with a gain upon the tax paid on tobacco of over 20,000,000 pounds, growing out, I have no doubt, of the change in the law. The law further restricted the privilege of the farmer by saying if he sold tobacco as a peddler, he should pay a peddler's license. That was the only change made by the law of 1872.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Rhode Island is very seldom mistaken in his facts, but he has been misled this time, perhaps by the Senator from Ohio at his side.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have read the figures from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BECK. The tax before that reduction was 32 cents, upon all but the lowest grade of smoking tobacco; the tax was 32 and 16; nine-tenths of it was 32 cents. We reduced it all to 20 cents. It was said that we would by so doing sustain a loss of over $6,000,000. The Treasury Department sent that information to Mr. DAWES, then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as I published in a table the other day, when I showed that the reduction from 32 cents to 20 cents, when the large bulk of it was paying 32 cents, not only did not reduce it $6,000,000, but reduced it less than a million dollars or a million and a half. The gain of revenue commenced by a reduction of the tax. The tax on all but the lowest grade of smoking tobacco was 32 cents; the fraction paying 16 cents cut a very small figure. Under that law producers were allowed to sell as they pleased all the leaf tobacco they raised, for there never was a tax upon leaf tobacco; there is no tax upon it now.

The tax of $500 on the retail dealer in leaf tobacco was imposed just as 10 per cent. upon State banks was imposed, in a mean, indirect way, when Congress did not venture directly to repeal it, and the people who obtained the reduction from 32 cents down to 20 cents submitted to the limitation that was put upon them of selling their own tobacco to anybody they pleased, as they had always the right before, in order to get the benefit of the reduction from 32 to 20 cents. The Senator says that this is the old contest which has been going on for twenty years, has been going on trying to obtain the right of limited sale. I hold the act in my hand which passed the House of Representatives in 1872. It contains this provision:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the farmer or planter from selling, at the place of production, tobacco of his own growth and raising at retail directly to the consumers to an amount not exceeding $100 annually.

The Senator from Ohio says Congress never would allow that to be done. The House of Representatives in 1872 passed it with great unanimity. I was there and know it. The chief of the internal-revenue tobacco section, Mr. Kimball, and Mr. Douglass, the Commissioner, came before the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I was a member, and said the restricted right would do no harm, and we passed it. It went to the Senate and of course fell into the hands of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont. They struck it out and raised the same hue and cry against the producers of tobacco they are raising now. Up to that time no fraud had been perpetrated. The provision, I repeat, passed the House of Representatives without a charge of fraud, and it was stricken out by these two very gentlemen now raising the hue and cry, in a conference committee, and I have the conference report before me.

No fraud was ever proved to have been perpetrated under the law of 1868, and how can it be perpetrated? The men on their own places, as I said, at the head of creeks and hollows and little places where dealers will not go, raise their little patches in a garden; the whole crop is only worth $20, $50, or $75—less than $100. Nine-tenths of these so-called million of tobacco producers Senators are talking about raise less than $50 worth. It is raised by the women and children when the men are at work elsewhere, perhaps hired out, many of them black, many of them poor white people. They were in the habit always of selling to the consumer of tobacco a few hands of tobacco for a little money to buy their sugar, coffee, tea, and, if you please to call them so, the luxuries that they needed. This trade never reached the big cities or even the villages, and they never interfered with the manufacturers of tobacco. They have a right to-day, every man has a right, to raise his own tobacco, to have his own tobacco patch and smoke tobacco and chew it and use it and give it away, but he cannot go into the market and buy a dollar's worth of sugar with it. They always had the right to use their own product, they always have done it, and Congress cannot prevent them from doing it, unless it prevents the cultivation of tobacco altogether.

All that this amendment allows them to do is when they want to exchange tobacco with a neighbor who has none, who wants to consume it himself, for a chicken or a dozen eggs or something the tobacco producer needs and has not got, he shall have the right to utilize his product instead of throwing it away. It never did any damage to the revenue; and it never will do any harm to any extent that will interfere with it to any appreciable extent.

As I have said, there is no tax on leaf tobacco. These gentlemen who oppose my proposition so strenuously now in 1868 did not venture to impose a heavy tax; even on the dealer it was not more than $25 up to $10,000 worth of sales. If retail sales were going to do any harm why did such sales not do it then? Why did they not reduce the tax received by the Government below $30,000,000 and $33,000,600 in 1871 and 1872 if frauds were committed such as is now said will be? I regret extremely that my colleague fell into that error. I knew the Senator from Ohio would make all those charges. My colleague on Saturday said:

I agree with the Senator from Delaware that it is ruin to the revenue to allow the sale of leaf tobacco, and I am for allowing it because I am opposed to getting revenue from that source. Whenever you allow leaf tobacco to become free you destroy the revenue from tobacco, and that is the reason why I shall vote for the amendment of my colleague.

Although my colleague is generally right on these questions, yet he is not right in that position. Producers sold leaf tobacco from 1868 to 1872 without limit, indeed from 1864 to 1872; and retail dealers only paid $25 license during that time, and no harm ever came of it. In the light of that experience, I insist that by agreeing to my amendment to-day no damage to the revenue will come from it.

Each producer, I repeat, can now smoke and chew as much as he pleases of what he raises himself. He would have a right to sell it to a consumer under my amendment, not to a man to sell again, not to a man to put it upon the market, but to his neighbor; and it must be done at the place of production. As I said, up at the heads of creeks or remote hollows away from railroads, where communication is difficult and a hogshead could not be hauled, at places where no dealer would come, he should have a right to swap a hand or two of tobacco raised by his children, with the worms picked off by his chickens or turkeys, to a man who had a dozen eggs to sell him, and to swap it for what he needs instead of throwing it in the gutter. That is all I seek to do. There is no fraud in it. It will neither break down nor contract the revenue. It never did break down the revenue and never will. The amendment has passed, and this tirade over a thing which has already passed the Senate seems to me to be a useless quarrel over a settled question.

The Senator from Ohio illustrated that the tax of 16 cents was at a point where it would produce the maximum revenue, and he says if you reduce it you will reduce the revenue to the amount that the tax is taken off. I have denied that so often and proved it so often that it is not worth while to repeat it. When we reduced the tax from 32 cents down to 20 cents in 1872 the revenue swelled. When we put it back in 1875 from 20 cents to 24 cents the revenue did not swell at all in proportion to the tax. When in 1879 we reduced it from 20 cents to 16 cents the revenue did not fall off $12,000,000, as the Senator from Ohio, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, ding-donged into our ears in message after message that it would. The Senator from Vermont spoke of it on this floor in the same way, and in order to maintain themselves, by a system of Treasury bookkeeping they sought to charge everything that they could to manufactured tobacco and the increase from tobacco to something else.

Yet the great fact, as I said, remains that the amount collected from tobacco is $8,000,000 more than it was before we reduced the tax to 16 cents, and you may reduce it to 12 cents to-day and in three years we will get as much as we now get at 16 cents. My opinion is you may reduce it to 8 cents and in less than seven years you will receive as much revenue as you are doing with the tax at 16 cents. Of course there will be a reduction at first.

I repeated the other day, and I repeat again in answer to the argument of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio, that decrease in revenue does not follow a diminution of the taxes.

Take the tax on distilled spirits as given by the table furnished by the Commissioner. At a tax of $2 a gallon in 1868 there were 6,709,547 gallons withdrawn and the tax paid. The tax was reduced in 1868 to 50 cents, and in 1870 the number of gallons was 76,339,807 withdrawn and paid for. Again, in 1875 the tax was put up to 90 cents and with twelve or thirteen million more people and the larger industries requiring alcohol in every form, for the year ending July, 1881, only 67,372,575 gallons were withdrawn and tax paid.

Why was it that 38,000,000 people, no more prosperous and not as prosperous when the tax was 50 cents a gallon, withdrew and paid for 76,000,000 gallons when fifty-one or fifty-two million people in 1881 only withdrew and paid for 67,000,000 gallons? It was because the tax at 90 cents crippled the industries of the country in everything in which alcohol was used and made people seek for other substitutes for their varnishes and in the thousand things they used alcohol for. So when you reduce the tax now the reduction will not at all correspond with the amount that is taken off. The increase will follow naturally from increased consumption, and the producer is benefited by two pounds being consumed where one is now.

Senators, there can be no proposition that in my opinion will give more relief to the people of this country than the small, apparently insignificant amendment which was passed on my motion allowing the poor people to sell their tobacco to the amount of $100 to the people who want to consume it; in other words, to swap their little garden profits, for that is all it will do, for something they need. If one old woman in the neighborhood has no tobacco and knits a pair of socks that she cannot carry to market, and she enjoys smoking leaf tobacco, she will swap that pair of socks she has knit for a few hands of tobacco with the child of a neighbor who has raised the tobacco. That is all there is in it. It does not go into the market, it does not interfere with the manufacturer at all; they do it now almost to the same extent that they will do it when you give them this right, except that the mass who do not use tobacco or need something else a little worse, and have no means of disposing of it, would be allowed the right of exchanging it, for no other purpose than to avoid what I have seen.

I have been at the court at Louisville. Judge Hays was appointed since I have been here as a judge of the circuit there. I attended the court the first time it met. He did not know much about it. He had never been in a United States court I believe before, and many of us doubted whether he would know how to conduct the affairs of the court, and there was some curiosity to see how it would be done. When he went to that court he found himself surrounded by the poorest set of people that anybody ever saw, white and black, brought from the mountains of Kentucky and from the heads of hollows, and nine-tenths of them were brought there because they had sold a hand of tobacco to somebody for 10 cents or swapped it for a pound of sugar, and there they were culprits against the law of the United States, brought there by the officers. When the judge comprehended the situation and saw that these people were brought there by men who had traveled hundreds of miles to bring them, and when some of them had gone there pretending to be peddlers of sugar and coffee and tea and sugar, which these so-called peddlers were going around with and taking hands of tobacco for, who had arrested them and brought them to Louisville and charged the United States from $10 to $20 apiece mileage, and fees for arresting and bringing them there, the judge, like a sensible man, dismissed all the cases and gave his officers warning that if there was any more of that sort of thing he would imprison them for contempt of his court, and we knew he was a good judge from that day on.

It is to prevent that condition of things that I seek this amendment. There is more persecution, there is more oppression done in the way of deceiving people by Government officers going in the guise of peddlers and dealers and then arresting and imprisoning them and making the United States pay the expenses of it, than in all other regards put together.

Mr. President, I did not expect to say a word upon this subject. The amendment has passed, and I think the sense of the Senate will allow it to remain as a part of the bill, whether these gentlemen see fit to abandon the bill or not. If they want to abandon their bill perhaps it will be a very wise and decent thing in them to do it and bring us in a respectable bill, and when they do that we shall not embarrass it by amendments. But when they look all over the taxation of this country, over the army of official spies and informers they have everywhere, and look over the tariff taxation, and then see nothing meritorious except to relieve a few bankers and patent-medicine venders, and to take the tax off matches that cost nothing, their bill is contemptible and they ought to abandon it. If it is made decent at all it will be done by our amendments, by amendments such as these I have offered for the relief of a suffering people; and I assure them that they cannot deter us from offering amendments by threatening to abandon their bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senate to the fact that the legislation of 1872 resulted from the experience of the Government and was made upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of avoiding the class of frauds to which the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Delaware have already alluded.

Mr. BECK. Did not the Government receive the sums of money that I said it received?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will read from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1871:

> For the last three years this office has been in possession of information that a large and increasing amount of raw or leaf tobacco, in portions of the country, was being sold at retail directly to consumers without the payment of tax. Evidences of this traffic have from time to time been furnished by assessors and collectors, and more especially by supervisors, who, in taking transcripts from the books required by law to be kept by leaf dealers, have reported that they find scores of pages of these books where entries were made of sales from one-half pound to four pounds each; and I am constantly in receipt of letters from manufacturers of tobacco, complaining of the injury to their business arising from such sales, and informing me that in some localities where they formerly received frequent and large orders for manufactured tobacco they now make no sales, the same parties who used to make these orders now ordering instead supplies of natural leaf from the wholesale leaf dealers. Against this traffic, grown to such large proportions, so injurious to their business as manufacturers and prejudicial to the interest of the Government revenue, they ask to be protected.
> To this end I would recommend that section 59 of the act of July 20, 1868, be so amended as to impose a special tax of $500 on every person who shall make a business of selling raw or leaf tobacco to persons other than those who have paid special tax as leaf dealers, or as manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or who shall sell leaf tobacco in quantities less than 25 pounds, or who shall sell such tobacco directly to consumers or for consumption without its being manufactured. And if this is not deemed sufficient I would further recommend such a tax on the sales of such dealers in excess of $5,000 annually as would be equivalent to the tax on the same amount and value of manufactured tobacco. Such a provision of law will not only give the required protection to the manufacturer who now pays a special tax for carrying on his business in addition to a specific tax on all his products, but it will also, I am persuaded, tend largely to increase the Government revenue from this source.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his report for 1872, after this law had been adopted and had been in force for a number of months, said:

> I have, however, reason to believe that, with the additional safeguards provided by the new law against the sale of manufactured tobacco in fraud of the revenue, and with the taxes imposed upon the sale at retail of raw or leaf tobacco for consumption without its being subjected to any process of manufacture, the collections from tobacco under the uniform rate of 20 cents a pound, which is a reduction of more than 6 cents a pound from the average rate for the last two fiscal years, will reach nearly if not quite the sums realized for either of the same years.

Showing that the large increase of 20,000,000 pounds upon which tax was collected in 1873 was directly traceable to the change in the law, of which the Senator from Kentucky now complains.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has demonstrated that the amendment which he offered to the bill will not injuriously affect the revenues from tobacco. He has also shown that it will be a great convenience to a large number of small producers of tobacco. Inasmuch as this bill is entitled "a bill to reduce taxation," and is brought forward with a boast that it is intended to relieve the country of the necessity of supplying a surplus revenue which we do not know what to do with, it seems that the relief which ought to be given under it should be extended to those classes who are most in need of it. I shall not further discuss the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, for it would be useless to undertake to add anything to the force of the arguments and facts which he has adduced to support it.

The amendment which I had the honor to offer in the Senate, and which the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Delaware think will furnish them a sufficient excuse for voting against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, is in itself a very harmless amendment; entirely so so far as the internal revenue is concerned. This amendment takes hold of the subject of tobacco after it has passed through the process of manufacture and is ready for sale to consumers. It has paid all the tax that the law has imposed upon tobacco.

The Senator from Ohio informed us of the fact which we knew very well, but I desired to put it on record from his own lips, that leaf tobacco in this country pays no tax; it is only manufactured tobacco that is taxed. My amendment deals only with manufactured tobacco. The Senator from Kansas suggested that these two amendments form a sieve through which all the revenue to be collected from tobacco would be taken away and the country would be left entirely prostrate so far as that source of taxation is concerned. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLLIAMS] seems to have concurred in that opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator does not understand that I am against the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. No; he is not against the amendment, he is for it, but for a wrong reason.

Let me refer to the laws which relate to the sale of manufactured tobacco. The manufacturer, before the tobacco is removed from the manufactory, pays the tax upon it. He puts the last stamp upon the box or package, whatever it may be. That is made requisite by law, and he is liable to very severe penalties if he allows tobacco to go out of his factory without the stamp being affixed to it. The retail dealer pays no tax whatever upon the tobacco itself. All that the law requires him to do is to take out a license to sell it, and to sell it to whom he may, and in such quantities as he may choose. That license, under this bill, costs $2.40, I confess an inconsiderable sum to a man who is engaged in the business of retailing tobacco, or in any other business that is licensed by law. It seems to be quite a small tax. Bear in mind that that is the only additional source of revenue upon manufactured tobacco, so far as my amendment affects the bill, which the law has imposed on this commodity.

The simple question is presented whether a person having hands under his control, not being a retail dealer in tobacco, not being in the pursuit of any mercantile business whatever, may, without the payment of a license tax of $2.40, not sell, but furnish as supplies or rations to his own hands manufactured tobacco to the extent of one hundred pounds per annum. Really the matter appears to be so small that if I were not acquainted with the fact that it is a matter of great public convenience and security I should not be here asking that this amendment should be put upon the bill; but the convenience of it I have already mentioned and described in the remarks which I made last Saturday.

I have shown that to men who are living distant from points of distribution, from the retail stores in the country, it is a matter of very great convenience that they should be allowed to furnish as supplies or rations to their hands a small quantity of tobacco. I will suppose that one hundred pounds per annum would be a sufficient supply for five hands, possibly eight, on the average. Those men who have larger plantations, larger lumbering interests which they are accustomed to supply, cannot abuse the privilege of selling the manufactured tobacco unless they take out a license tax of $2.40 so as to authorize them under the law to proceed to sell to whomever they may please.

The difficulty and danger which I wish to avoid is this: it very often happens that a man buys tobacco for his own purpose. It is bought by the package; it is bought by the box. A man would buy one hundred pounds of tobacco in a box, who lives perhaps fifteen or twenty miles from the nearest point of distribution and finds it inconvenient to send his wagon in to get tobacco when he wishes, or to send a messenger or to go himself to a retail store distant from him to buy his supply of tobacco. The person employed to work for him may be his own son; it may be his neighbor; it makes no difference who he is, so he is in his employment and desires to receive in the nature of supplies or rations a part of the tobacco which he has bought and upon which the entire tax has been paid. If that man ventures to sell the tobacco, to exchange it for labor or to exchange it for any other commodity, to dispose of it and carry it into his accounts with his employé, he is liable to be indicted and is too frequently indicted and carried away and put upon trial for this trifling and inconsequential violation of the mere technicality of the law, leaving its spirit entirely untouched.

The Government of the United States is trying to derive revenue from the license tax upon tobacco and from all other sources. Why should it not make this exemption in favor of men whose convenience is thus so greatly subserved? It only brings the planter in competition with the retail dealer, the retail dealer himself having the privilege of selling in any quantity on paying $2.40 a year license tax for selling tobacco; whereas the man who merely wishes to distribute it in the form of supplies or rations to his employés cannot afford to do that and he cannot afford to be harassed by it.

It has been intimated here that the retail dealer has some returns to make to the Government. That is not the law. No retail dealer of tobacco is required by law to make any return whatsoever of the amount of sales or the persons he sells to; so that the Senator from Kansas was quite mistaken when he supposed it was the purpose of the law to trace the tobacco all the way from the field in which it was cultivated to the spittoon. The Government of the United States ceases its vigilance over this question after the tax has been paid and the stamp affixed, thereafter concerning itself no further to ascertain whether the person who buys it or who handles it for retail distribution through the country has taken out his license.

That is the whole subject, and in the amendment which I have had the honor to offer, and which is an amendment that is very highly thought of by a large number of people of the United States, although it is a small matter perhaps for the Senate to consider, the controversy is entirely between the men who wish to use tobacco as supplies or as rations to their employés and the retail dealers, not with the Government at all. Therefore the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Ohio have perched upon a very small margin when they undertake to combat the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, which is an important amendment to this bill, because this bill has such slight features in it as they have complained of. It will not do to take refuge behind these pretexts for now refusing to reduce the tax to be levied upon manufactured tobacco. The principle of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is exactly correct, and it will increase the revenues perhaps rather than decrease them.

But suppose it does decrease them, we are upon a bill now the very purpose and title of which is to decrease taxation, not to increase it. In all that we have so far discussed under the bill there is no class who have yet been mentioned who are so deserving of the consideration of the Congress of the United States as the men who engage in the production of this valuable article of commerce.

We have here the bankers and we have the manufacturers of patent medicines. I have always thought that it was a serious blot upon our system of laws that we authorized any patent upon proprietary medicines. We have the manufacture of matches and matters of that kind. Contrasting these classes together, I would very freely give to the producers of tobacco, the only class mentioned besides those I have named, and of sugar, the entire advantage of all the reduction we are to make rather than to place it to the advantage of the other classes who have been mentioned here; it would be very much better for the country.

Sir, there is harm always in the taxation of agricultural productions. The law as it stands now and as this bill proposes to keep it is a law which discriminates in the most cruel and violent manner against the producers of a large agricultural crop in this country which yields very many millions not only to the local and home trade but also a great many millions to the foreign exportation. The Senate cannot shut its eyes to the fact that the system of laws we have now does discriminate against the producer of tobacco. It does not give a man who has the free right to produce this article a free market in which to sell it. That is undeniably true. You compel the producer of tobacco in the leaf to sell it to the manufacturer, and if you make it for foreign exportation it is the same thing to the producer.

Here is a license tax placed upon the dealer in leaf tobacco. If he is a retail dealer it is a very heavy license tax; if he is a wholesale dealer engaged in that business it is comparatively a light tax. But suppose a planter in Kentucky or Virginia desires to raise tobacco which finds a better market in London than it does here when sold in the leaf, how is that man going to export his tobacco in the leaf? What agencies must he resort to? The man who grows ten, fifteen, or twenty hogsheads of tobacco, or five or three, as the case may be, is not an exporter of tobacco; he cannot form the commercial relations which are necessary to enable him to get his crop disposed of in a foreign country; he must have a middleman. Who is the middleman that the law requires as it now stands and as this bill requires? It must be a man who is a licensed dealer in leaf tobacco. The planter who desires to make his crop entirely for export, to reach a better market than he can find in the United States, is bound to have it handled by a man who is a licensed dealer in leaf tobacco. What does that amount to? You may disguise it as you please, but it is an export taxation upon the producer of the tobacco. It is true that it is not levied in the form and in the nature of an export tax, but it is as to that man just as much an export tax as if directly laid by act of Congress, for you prohibit a man from selling to the foreign purchaser who may come here unless he is a licensed dealer, or from selling to the home purchaser unless he is a licensed dealer, and you compel him either to become the exporter of his own product in his own name or through the agency of another. I do not even know that he could export it in his own name; but certainly if it is exported in the name of another or through the agency of another, that person must be a licensed dealer, and that is your export tax upon tobacco.

We speak of the fact that France and England and other states across the Atlantic Ocean are large consumers of tobacco raised in the United States, and that that is an immense source of revenue to our people here. If a free market for tobacco across the Atlantic Ocean is required, we have no right to except tobacco raised for exportation by a levy of the tax upon the man who is to take it from the plantation and put it on board ship for exportation abroad into the hands of a man who is licensed under our laws to handle it.

Gentlemen rush forward in their desire to raise revenue regardless of their duty under the Constitution of the United States. They seem to have no regard for anything or anybody except the manufacturers of tobacco, whom they provide for by confining the whole product of the United States in one channel and compelling it to follow that and no other. There never was a more distinctive monopoly created by law in the world than that which is created by the existing laws on the subject of the taxation on tobacco in favor of the manufacturer. It is a clean, pure monopoly, and when we come here and ask that the tax upon it shall be reduced so that the people may have a better chance to realize something for their labor and to have a part of the profit out of this great crop to themselves, one little objection and another is urged here upon the floor of the Senate. It is said that gentlemen would vote for a reduction if it were not for the fact that the man who produces the tobacco has the right to sell $100 worth of it in leaf to the consumers about his cabin in the mountain gorges, or the man who is off in a distant place working lumber for market or raising cotton, corn, wheat, or whatever it may be, distant from all parts of distribution, has the mean, poor privilege of distributing one hundred pounds of it as rations and as supplies to his employés. Senators stand upon ground like that, and argue against a reduction of this tax from 16 cents to 8 cents upon the fancy that they are secure in their apologies for placing what I must be permitted to say is an act of injustice on the people of this country.

Sir, the people of this country are opposed to these internal-revenue taxes, and if it were not for the mischief that whisky is working in this land and has always wrought in it there would be a universal outcry throughout the land for a reduction of the tax upon whisky. That complaint cannot be made against tobacco, for the myriads use it in all the nations of the earth. There is no nation so polite and yet none so barbarous as that they do not use this production of the earth, and it is a very much mooted question now among the greatest authors in medicine whether it is not one of the most healthful of the agencies which have been employed by man.

I have regretted very much that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia has received so cold a welcome from the other side of the Chamber. The Committee on Finance took a bill which was confined exclusively to the reduction of internal revenue as it came from the House and they took the liberty of incorporating two features upon it. One was the reduction of 25 per cent. taxation upon sugar; another was the increase of 100 per cent. upon cotton-ties, seeming thereby to single out the productions of a particular part of this country and the articles which are of a peculiar use in a particular part of the country from all the vast grist of customs duties imposed by law, and to devote their talents and energies and attention to the raising of the tariff upon one and a reduction upon the other. After the Committee on Finance have come in here with that proposition upon a bill sent to us by the House of Representatives, and have originated every feature of the bill that relates to customs duties, they surely do not expect Senators on their own side or on this to refrain from offering such amendments to the bill as in their judgment would affect the revenues of the country and also benefit the people.

The Committee on Finance have no right to expect to choke down men who come here for the purpose of giving relief to the great masses in this country, when they themselves, for purposes of their own, possibly only for party purposes, venture a reformation of the tariff of the country in two particulars which cut exclusively against a certain section of the country. Then when a Senator from the same section rises and proposes to give further relief to the people of his own country, he a Southern Senator, the objection and complaint is made that the bill is being so overloaded with amendments that the fathers and friends of it are about to abandon it to its fate. I prognosticated when the bill came in that it would be abandoned by the Senators who brought it here. I foresaw that whenever any material amendment was put on the bill for the relief of the country those gentlemen who have framed it according to their own views and for their own purposes would unquestionably abandon it.

I am getting to be the friend of this bill. If the bill is modified somewhat more, so that the people of the United States who are engaged in its actual industries, in its profitable industries, in its beneficial industries, shall receive some of the advantage of it, I shall get my consent to vote for it with a great deal of pleasure.

The Senator from Virginia must recollect that when he comes in here as a readjuster, as he announced himself when he first arrived on the floor of the Senate, the party he is acting with intends to permit only that readjustment which is a political readjustment not material readjustment. We are in favor of a readjustment of the tariff here to-day, and I am heartily in accord with the Senator from Virginia in his attempt to readjust the tax upon tobacco, for although my State is not a large tobacco-producing State, still it has a large interest in the consumption of tobacco, and it also produces a reasonable amount of it. This is a species of readjustment that I am in favor of, and I regret to see that when the great readjuster from Virginia has taken his seat on that side of the Chamber he cannot persuade his colleagues to do anything else but to readjust the politics of the country. Let us readjust the tariff; let us readjust the internal revenue of the country; and we shall thereby gain some benefit to the people of this land, to say the least of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I wish to state that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] has been called to Richmond to attend to some important private business, and he requested me to pair with him before he left. I did so. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when nis name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR.]

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. SLATER, (when his name was called.) I am paired on these questions with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT.] But as I understand that on this question he would vote "nay," I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Beck,	Farley,	Morgan,	Voorhees,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSOM. I was not in the Senate when either the name of the Senator now presiding or that of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] was called. I should have stated that those Senators are paired. The Senator from Virginia would have voted "yea" on the amendment which has just been passed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who now occupies the chair announced the pair. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "thousand," in line 10, section 3, the Committee on Finance report to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That on all original unbroken packages of checks, matches, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the passage of this act, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the reduction. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. MAHONE. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand, the rebate is in reference to taxation on all these articles.

Mr. HARRIS. Had we not better have the amendment of the Senator from Virginia read before the Senator from Illinois proceeds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for so much of section 3 as is proposed to be stricken out by the Committee on Finance the following:

Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of such articles, including smoking and manufactured tobacco, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction shall go into effect upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the reduction: Provided, The same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been ascertained or presented within thirty days following the date of the reduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, a single word. It will be seen that it will be very difficult, if not impossible, that this provision should be inserted without a very large increase of force of the internal revenue. To make this reduction not only upon the manufacturers but upon the dealers throughout this country would involve an endless amount of work.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator from Illinois proceeds, I should like to have read a telegram from Charleston on this subject.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON, July 7, 1882.

Senators HAMPTON and BUTLER:

Make all efforts to retain rebate clause in revenue bill.

MANTONE & CO.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont. He says this rebate will cause a large increase in the force of the Internal Revenue Department. I should like to have him explain in what way it would require an increase of the force.

Mr. MORRILL. This rebate would be allowed to all the dealers throughout the country, and of course there should be some inspection of the amount on hand. It is what has never been done even when we made a reduction twice as large. When we reduced the tax from 24 cents to 16 cents it only had from March to May to go into operation, and there never was any complaint about that. By nearly all who are interested in this bill it has been represented that if we only give sufficient time, so that the dealers can sell what they have on hand, there will be no necessity for any rebate.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to detain the Senate in order to discuss this proposition, but merely suggest that I cannot understand why an increase in the force of the Internal-Revenue Department would be necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the tax paid. According to the argument which has been made here by different Senators on the part of the Committee on Finance, and the debate has shown that these tobaccos were traced all the time, and the objection was made to one of the amendments proposed to the bill, which I think was very improper, that it would be impossible to trace that character to tobacco, and hence fraud might be perpetrated.

Mr. MORRILL. You cannot trace it after it has been stamped and sold.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not stamped and sold. It is where the tobacco is in the hands of a manufacturer, where the tax has been paid, that the rebate is to apply. Hence all of this character of tobacco is traceable and does not require special agents or any increase of force in the Department. All the tobacco within a division or district is traceable by the collector of internal revenue. His books are kept in such a way, as I understand, as to trace all the tobacco, and his report is made here to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in reference to every package, with the number, so that there is no difficulty whatever in tracing it so far as ascertaining the amount of taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Illinois has not noticed the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, which not only includes manufacturers but all dealers. That is a very different thing.

Mr. LOGAN. Whether manufacturers and dealers in manufactured tobacco, where the dealer paid the tax, I cannot see why that tobacco is not traceable just as well as it would be in the hands of the manufacturer. The Senator laughs. Now, let me see whether I am correct or not. If all dealers are required to make a report just the same as the manufacturer is, and that report is made to the collector as to the amount of tax paid, and that is reported to the Commissioner, I should like to know what the trouble would be in tracing that tobacco.

I cannot understand that there is any difficulty about it at all. It seems to me that there is none, and I am in favor of this proposition of the Senator from Virginia, which provides for a rebate on tobacco and articles of this kind. I think the proposition of the House goes too far. This is a modification of that, as I understand it, leaving out checks, &c., and I am for that amendment. I think it is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the proposition for a rebate is always extremely plausible, and upon the basis of the bill as it passed the House it was right. The bill as it passed the House was to take effect immediately in regard to all these taxes, and in that case it would seem to be just and right. It would be a surprise to any dealer or manufacturer, a manufacturer especially, to require him to make a sudden change in his taxes and not refund him the money he had paid. For instance, take a manufacturer who had bought stamps and applied those stamps to packages, if the repeal should be effected immediately he could not sell those packages, although the mere effect of repeal was to reduce the value of the stamped article. That would be an act of injustice. However, to avoid that injustice, in our revenue laws heretofore we have put their taking effect forward to a time when it was believed that all the stock on hand would be consumed or sold. That is the principle of the bill as reported by the Senate committee. The bill as it passed the House took effect immediately. The first line read, "That from and after the passage of this act, except as hereinafter provided." The Senate Finance Committee, however, have changed that, and the Senate have agreed to their amendment, so that all these taxes take effect in the future.

Mr. LOGAN. On the 1st of October.

Mr. SHERMAN. Some of them on the 1st of January. The reduced tobacco tax, for instance, takes effect on the 1st of January by the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] It has always been the custom to allow a reasonable time within which the stock on hand may be absorbed, so as to make it easy to adopt the new system and prepare for a new demand at the end of a fixed period. That has been done in this case, and to the satisfaction of dealers. Therefore it was that the provision for a rebate was stricken out, and it was done at the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the letter of the Acting Commissioner. I will read it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, July 1, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to suggest for your consideration that the inclosed bill (H. R. No. 5538) "to reduce internal-revenue taxation," which passed the House of Representatives on the 27th ultimo, and is now before the Finance Committee of the Senate, be amended as follows:

Strike out the proviso to section 3 of said bill and insert, before the words "the tax on matches," in line 17 of section 1 of the bill, the words, "and on and after the 1st day of January next;" and after the words "Revised Statutes," in line 20 of said section 1, insert the following words: "Provided that no drawback shall be allowed upon articles embraced in said schedule that shall be exported on or after that date." Also strike out, after the words "consumption or," in line 2 of section 3, the word "use," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "sale, on and after the 1st day of January next."

It has not been customary heretofore in acts for the repeal or reduction of internal-revenue taxes to provide for the refunding of taxes already paid. A notable instance of this is in the case of the reduction by act of March 1, 1879, of the tax on tobacco from 24 cents to 16 cents per pound, which act made no provision for refunding, but deferred the taking effect of the reduction until the 1st day of May following, and under such provision the trade was fully prepared therefor. There is no necessity for the provision in the proviso to section 3 for the refunding of the tax to manufacturers, even if the stamps in their hands are placed on goods not removed from the factory, as section 3426 United States Revised Statutes amply provides for the redemption of all stamps unused or unnecessarily used.

The great objection to the provisions of said proviso to section 3 is that it would involve the Government in a very large expenditure for additional clerks to examine and deputy collectors to investigate the hundreds of thousands of small refunding claims—most of them for a less amount than it would cost the Government to adjust them—which would be presented by cigar dealers who have on hand one or more unbroken boxes of cigars, and by other dealers who may have a few boxes of matches. Further, it would open the door to a mass of fraudulent claims that would be difficult to detect.

The postponement of the time of taking effect of the reduction of the tax on cigars and cigarettes until the 1st of January next will give this office the needed time in which to dispose of the present stock of stamps, to prepare the new stamps to be used after the reduction and to duly provide for the accountability of the collectors in all the districts of the country, however remote, as to stamps in their hands at the date of the taking effect of the reduction, the values of which are thereby changed to but two-thirds of their value at which they were issued and charged to such collectors.

I have now to ask that if you agree with me in the views herein expressed, you will cause this letter, or the substance thereof, to be communicated to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, with the request that I be given an apportunity to appear before the committee before definitive action upon the bill, and explain with greater detail than is practicable in this letter my reasons for the amendments herein suggested.

Very respectfully,

H. C. ROGERS,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. President, the number of claims can be illustrated by the number of dealers in tobacco alone. There are about 400,000 dealers in tobacco. Every one of these dealers may have one or more boxes of cigars or packages of manufactured tobacco. If the law should take effect immediately and each of these 400,000 persons should make claim, as they all would, it would be impossible to detect any fraud; you would have to take the statement of the dealer, for it would be impossible to send agents around to examine and identify and count the number of boxes or packages. So in the case of match-stamps, which are distributed all over the country; it would be impossible to test the claims that might be presented for the return of the tax paid on matches. Therefore it was that the great manufacturers of matches came to the committee and said that there would be no trouble at all if you would allow them two months' time, because the stock on hand would be absorbed and they could provide beforehand for the new unstamped matches and distribute them so that there would be no difficulty and no reclamation. They said they would not ask any reclamation if they had a reasonable time, and the Committee on Finance have in every case given the parties a reasonable time such as they wanted.

In regard to tobacco, which was first put off a little longer, the Senator from Kentucky in his amendment proposed the 1st of January, which is ample time to absorb all the stock on hand.

Mr. LOGAN. October is the time fixed for cigars.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know, and that is sufficient time, because cigars are more rapidly sold; but if the Senator thinks that is a mistake, he can move to put it at November or January; but the experience of the Department is that two months is ample to absorb the stock on hand.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendment in reference to tobacco gives till the 1st of January?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. And the amendment in regard to cigars and cigarettes is the 1st of October.

Mr. SHERMAN. But all the trade have adapted themselves to this supposing it would pass in this shape. We have not heard a word of complaint from any of the dealers in cigars, and they are multitudinous as we know, in regard to the time of the act taking effect. The reduction is only one-fifth of a cent, and they probably will get rid of all their stock and will not feel it. At any rate it is not worth while to open the door.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But does putting off the time of the act taking effect relieve the dealers who are remote from the place of manufacture? They are obliged to keep a stock on hand. Take for example the dealers on the Pacific coast. They are obliged to keep two months' stock on hand. Being 3,000 miles away from the place of manufacture of these articles, they cannot sell out all their stock and have none on hand at the time the act goes into effect, because it would stop their business for at least thirty days, because it would take thirty days to get a new stock from the manufacturers. It would really take longer than that, perhaps sixty days. It does not relieve them any by putting the time off.

Mr. ALLISON. They would have thirty days more to sell the stamped goods.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But they cannot buy the new stock, which pays the lesser tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; they can buy immediately. We have provided in this bill that after the 15th of August they may manufacture the new stock; but I am not tenacious about that. The committee fixed the 1st of October because that was the general opinion of the trade; but if the Senator from California thinks they would not have notice in San Francisco or other places on the Pacific coast in October, the proper motion would be to fix it on the 1st of January.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not make the point that they would not have notice by October. The point I make is that it does not make any difference to them, but if there is a clause which permits the manufacturer to manufacture and stamp the goods at the reduced rate before October comes——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that only relates to matches.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It ought to relate to cigars.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no trouble, because the very moment the law takes effect they may get the new stamps as soon as they can get them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But it is the manufacturer who stamps.

Mr. SHERMAN. The manufacturer may stamp with the new stamp, but he cannot sell until the 1st of October.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Now, see the condition in which the dealer in San Francisco is placed. He cannot buy any of the new stock until the 1st of October at the place of manufacture, say in New York. It will take thirty days to get that stock out to San Francisco. During those thirty days he has no stock on hand except the old stock.

Mr. ALLISON. But he, of course, continues to sell the old stock for thirty days. Of course if the stamped article cannot get to San Francisco for thirty days he is perfectly protected for those thirty days in selling his stamped article. There is not the slightest trouble about that. It is a perfect machine; it works whether it be one, two, three, or twenty or thirty days. If consumers want the article they will continue to buy from day to day.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It may be so, as between him and other dealers, but as between him and the Government, the Government is taking something off him which it does not receive from other people.

Mr. ALLISON. The statement is a plausible one, but has no force. A little dealer will buy to supply his customers of the stamped tobacco or whatever until he can get the reduced stamp tobacco, and the customer must do without smoking or chewing for a month unless he pays the additional price. There is not the slightest trouble about it in practice.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate can fail to observe that the change in the tax proposed by the amendment is but a becoming act of justice to all the tobacco interests, for it affects all. It is urged on the part of gentlemen that it is difficult to execute the law, that it will be troublesome to the Government to ascertain what amount of rebate is due to the dealers in tobacco. Why, sir, we must not forget that it is troublesome, it is difficult, and it is expensive to administer justice everywhere, even in our courts, and yet they are essential. Now, what is all this revenue establishment for? Why will not the existing agents of the Revenue Department of the Government be ample and sufficient to ascertain what is justly due these dealers in tobacco who are found with unbroken tax-paid packages when this law goes into effect? What is the difficulty? I undertake to say——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to say that on reading his amendment I see that there will be no practical difficulty. I see that he deals only with manufactured tobacco. There is no difficulty at all about the manufactured tobacco, because it can be exported under existing law and the exporter has a refund of the duties.

Mr. MAHONE. The amendment which I propose applies to all the articles embraced in the third section, cigars and cigarettes, and also to the amendment adopted by the Senate, offered by the Senator from Kentucky, in respect to smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say, in respect to all these classes of articles, tobacco and the various manufactures of tobacco, if the dealer has it on hand he may export it at any time and get a refund for it.

Mr. MAHONE. Now, I ask what is the difficulty in carrying out this provision? It is not sufficient to say that it will be troublesome to the Government or that it will be expensive. You can make no such answer as that to a just demand; but I ask what is the difficulty? You have your revenue system not only comprehending grand divisions of the State but all manner of subdivisions—subdivisions of such magnitude as to territory as will enable the revenue officer to see all the dealers in tobacco as often as it may be necessary to enforce the law and to see that the law is respected. These agents of the Government are required at certain periods during the year to take verified inventories of all the tobacco held in stock. Now, I want to know why this cannot be done under this provision? I undertake to say that the Revenue Department of this Government will not deny that their existing agents can within thirty days visit every factory and every dealer and there verify the inventory of the tobacco on hand, tax-paid, at the time your law goes into effect.

Where, then, is the difficulty? Where is the expense? I cannot understand. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has told us that no one comes here asking for a reduction in the rate of taxation on tobacco. Well, sir, if that be true it is because the people engaged in the culture of tobacco have had no opportunity to express themselves through any organized body to the Senate; but there is no Senator here who represents a tobacco-growing district in this country that will undertake to deny, so far as his constituents are concerned, that they are anxious for a reduction of the tax. But, sir, I would ask the Senator from Ohio, I would ask other gentlemen here, to tell me where there is a tobacco-manufacturing establishment, whether of chewing-tobacco, smoking-tobacco, snuff, or of cigars or of cigarettes, that has not emphasized their great concern and desire for the principle of this rebate as essential to the protection of their just and proper interest, and as essential to protect the proper interest of the growers of tobacco, because as the one is affected the other sympathizes.

Now, sir, how has this operated in the past? When the tax was reduced, in 1879, from 24 cents to 16, who has forgotten the disaster which was brought on the tobacco interest throughout the country, how many failures there were, how many men were pushed into bankruptcy by reason of the sudden and extraordinary reduction in the rate of the taxation, and against which, as to those holding tax-paid tobacco, there was no rebate? There was no measure of relief. What effect had it upon the revenue? I will mention but a single instance. One town in the State of North Carolina had regularly paid an average tax to the Government ranging from $160,000 to $170,000 per month; and it fell to $20,000 in 1879, under the influence of the discussion, the agitation, and the apprehension that there would be a stoppage of their business.

Immediately after the question was settled by Congress the revenue resumed its flow; immediately it returned to $170,000 from that single town in the State of North Carolina. I say now that there come here to this Chamber from Cincinnati, from the Pacific coast, from all the South, from the North, from all the dealers and manufacturers in this article, appeals that, whatever is done, you make this provision so that this business may go on without that interruption to which it has been heretofore subjected by the agitation, and by the discussion of this subject creating a depression in the trade and market value of this staple, which must continue so long as the question is open to discussion; and discussion, agitation, will continue so long as the tax prevails. Now, then, this interest pleads for justice in this, that whenever you shall change the tax you shall provide that on all tax-paid unbroken packages the difference shall be refunded.

Mr. President, what are the proper relations of the manufacturer and the dealer with the Government? Practically he is constituted its agent to collect this tax, for the whole theory of the tax is that the consumer shall pay it, that he who takes one pound shall pay 16 cents to the Government; but in order to make the mode of collecting the revenue easy and certain the Government chooses to constitute every manufacturer and every dealer in tobacco an agent, requiring him to give bond and sufficient security for an honest collection of the revenue, and he is required to pay this tax in advance. He not only becomes the guarantor but he has to advance the money. Now, I ask if it is just that your agent who has already advanced 16 cents a pound on tobacco, when you change your law and make it 12, or any lower rate, shall be required to suffer the loss between the 16 cents and the lower rate? That is practically the result. It is not honest.

Gentlemen say that you will accommodate this difficulty by fixing the time ahead when the new tax shall go into operation. That is not true; it cannot be true. If the declaration be true, you must suppose that every manufacturer in the United States is to stop now the manufacture of tobacco, to put his house in order when the new tax is to go into effect, or that he is to so measure the exact quantity of demand in order that he shall not be left on the day when the new tax goes into effect with any stock on hand on which he has paid the 16 cents.

It is no answer, I submit, to say that it is difficult, troublesome, or expensive to carry out this provision. If you desire that this business shall go on uninterruptedly, that the production and manufacture of this staple shall proceed, say to them by this provision that they shall be dealt fairly and equitably by; in a word, that on the day when this new tax goes into effect they shall be able to sell their tobacco, on which the higher tax has been paid, at the same rate as the man who comes in the day after and pays the new rate of taxation.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if his amendment, applying as it does to section 3, would include the reduction of the tax on tobacco generally which was adopted in section 1 by the Senate?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir; I have amended it to cover that case.

Mr. VANCE. I was not aware that it had been so modified. If it has been so modified, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Virginia with great pleasure. I think it nothing but a proposition of fair and even justice that when dealers in tobacco, or in any other article for that matter, have laid in a large supply for the purpose of supplying the trade, and Congress unexpectedly reduces or abolishes the tax, that they should not be made to suffer, but that the Government should compensate them for any loss that they might sustain in the stock on which they had paid the full amount of the original tax. It would not only put them to great loss in their actual outlay for stock, but it would put them at a great disadvantage with all other dealers who had not laid in any stock, and I therefore hope the Senate will concur in this amendment.

Mr. MAHONE. In answer to the Senator from North Carolina, I will state that the amendment I have proposed to the third section as it originally stood would have comprehended the subject of manufactured tobacco and snuff and smoking tobacco, looking to the adoption of the 8 cents reduction which I intended to bring in on the tenth line; but that amendment of mine failing, I have accommodated the proposed amendment by inserting smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, which are the three articles enumerated in the amendment adopted in connection with the first section.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will prevail. I have heard no good reason why it should not prevail. I think it is conceded by all that it should be taken as an abstract proposition that from and after the day that this law takes effect all tobacco should have a uniform rate of taxation, and that tobacco which necessarily comes into the market from and after that day should not bear two rates. Every discussion of this question here, like that upon the reduction of the tax upon whisky, necessarily has had a very depressing effect upon the business. The uncertainty whether the tax in the future will be one thing or another compels men to live from hand to mouth, and to have no more on hand than is absolutely necessary. The same is true when a reduction in the future is fixed. No man will have on hand as he approaches that day any more than is absolutely necessary for him to carry on his business if, notwithstanding the reduction takes place on that day, the tobacco that he has on hand will be obliged to pay a higher rate. The consequence is that this depression is to continue till October, till January, or till April. It were better far for all dealers in tobacco for it to take effect immediately without rebate than to take effect at any time in the future unless they can have a rebate.

Nobody will say, except the Senator from Iowa, that it is fair to make a man after the 1st day of January pay 16 cents a pound on tobacco which he had on the 31st day of December, when the tobacco which entered into the market on the 1st day of January pays only 12 cents.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue objects to this on two grounds. One is a ground which I hear every day, that it will make a great deal of trouble in the Internal-Revenue Bureau. I have heard opposition to reform in legislation based on the fact that it would compel us to open a new entry in a book in a Department. That was charged upon the consolidation of the agencies of the Indian Bureau. There has been for twenty years an account kept in the Interior Department for the collection, gathering together, and subsistence of Indians in particular localities, when the Indians all have been gathered for thirty-five years; and when it was proposed this year to strike that part out, it would not do because it would cause a great deal of trouble in the Interior Department to open a new account. And now the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says this will cause trouble; it will take he does not know how many clerks to do this business. That shows that the effect is general, that it affects a great many people. If there would be a great many applications for this drawback, that is an argument in favor of the redress it gives to a great many people. If it was only a hardship which was incidental and touching an individual, it might be that it must be regarded as one of those hardships that must be borne in the amendment of laws; but this is a universal one, according to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as the Senator from Ohio has stated his views.

Another objection which the Senator from Ohio has urged from the Commissioner is that he thinks there will be fraud, that there will be fraudulent claims. I am sure there will be; I have known of no remedial statute of this kind since I have been here that some wicked man did not think he would try to take advantage of; but I never knew before that that was a good reason for depriving all honest men of redress because some rascal or three or four rascals or a great many rascals would seek to take advantage of it and there would not be sagacity enough in the Department to detect it. That is a good argument against bank bills or Treasury notes, because time out of mind they have been counterfeited and the counterfeits have been passed off on the public by rascals. We must do the best we can to sift out the rascals and put our hands on them, and if I were the head of the Internal-Revenue Bureau I would cry peccavi and would not make any more such statements.

But the Senator from Iowa has the best way of getting over this. He says it is a hardship to make a man pay 16 cents tax on the 1st day of January on his tobacco that his neighbor has to pay only 12 cents on; but he says if his neighbor lives a good way off and cannot get into the same market with him he can put it off on his customer; and he says in the San Francisco case the dealers there will have an advantage of thirty days to do it in. My friend from Iowa does not mean that. That is not any fair answer, because my poor constituents cannot do that and all the rest who do not live on the Pacific coast cannot do it; and if they could do it would it be right? It does not alter the question, and it does not alter the justice of the thing when you change it off from one man to another man. It does not alter the fact that you get it off on the customer. It is wrong that after the 1st day of January unconsumed tobacco should be any more taxed because it was manufactured before than because it was manufactured after the 1st of January. That is the thing.

I see from the Commissioner's letter but two difficulties. One is a matter of bookkeeping and the other is a matter that he is afraid some people will deceive him. Are they objections? The other that my friend from Iowa suggests, which is a matter that I do not think he can seriously urge, is that the dealer will get it off his shoulders. The dealers off at a distance may have very immense quantities, as the Senator from California said, on hand tax paid. The dealers must if this rebate is refused stop having any on hand and keep only just enough to meet the demand from day to day; and so they must all over the country, and thus trade comes to a standstill.

But what is the difference between this case and when we took the stamp tax off legal instruments? We provide that anybody who had the stamps on hand could have them redeemed at the Treasury Department, and so whenever we have abolished taxes from time to time and year to year my friend from Iowa has co-operated with me in provisions which are in essence this rebate. We have provided that those who had invested in taxable property had paid a tax for the use of the Government upon articles not used until after a reduction in the tax should have a rebate. It is easier, I know, to take a stamp to the Internal-Revenue Bureau and have it redeemed, but the principle was precisely the same.

If our Finance Committee would trust itself to methods instead of coming here in this way with a refusal, absolutely saying it cannot accomplish this end, I think it would do the trade and business of the country great service and do no wrong to the Government.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I have been absent from the Senate the principal part of the day upon a committee of conference and am not perhaps as well prepared to speak upon this question as I should be, but I will ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments, because, in my judgment, this is a question of very great interest and very great importance to a very large class of people of this country.

I hope that the Senate this morning will remember that certainly for the last ten years this tobacco tax has been a question of constant agitation before Congress. There has scarcely been a session of the two Houses of Congress in which this question has not been disturbed. I do not think the statement can be disputed that in the last ten years this subject has been more agitated and that more changes have taken place and more have been attempted on this tax than upon any other or all other subjects of taxation together. Certainly at every Congress, and I think more than once at different sessions of the same Congress, this tax has been changed or threatened to be changed. At one time it was reduced from 32 cents to 24 cents; at another time to 20 cents, and at another to 16 cents. And once it was changed from 20 cents back to 24. The tobacco manufacturers have constantly during the last ten years been subject to uncertainty and fluctuation and suspense brought about by the action of Congress.

I submit to the Senate if this system of vicissitude in your laws of taxation can be right toward the manufacturer or toward the people? No business can flourish under such a system of legislation. I do not mention it as a partisan, but we all know the fact that last winter a declaration equivalent to an official announcement went forth from Washington that this tax should not be disturbed. I allude to the fact only to illustrate the constant change under which these manufacturers have had to labor. They have been the victims constantly of this repeated change of legislation by Congress.

Some Senator has said that the manufacturer made money by the change. That suggestion has only to be mentioned for every one to see its error. Each time that these changes have taken place the tobacco trade has been paralyzed, the market has been suspended, and hundreds and thousands of people, manufacturers, laborers, and traders have suffered not only inconvenience but absolute loss, real privation, by the act of the Government.

The tax should be reduced as it has already been reduced. And I regret that the amendment still further reducing the tax to 8 cents was not adopted by the Senate; but justice should be done to the manufacturer by an honest rebate.

What will be the effect of this reduction? The act is to take effect, I believe, on the 1st of January, 1883. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say it would take effect in October of this year, but the bill reads—I have consulted the Secretary—the 1st of January, 1883. What will be the result? Every tobacco manufacturer will be deterred from buying tobacco and manufacturing it for fear that he will have a large stock on hand without purchasers. Every dealer will hesitate to buy from the manufacturer, because he will say, whether he deals in 50 pounds or 1,000 pounds or 5,000 pounds, "I shall be caught on the 1st day of January, 1883, with this overtaxed tobacco in my hands and I shall suffer a loss." The result will be that the tobacco market will be depressed, the business of the tobacco manufacturer will be paralyzed, his laborers will be distressed, and all the co-ordinate branches of trade and business near him will sympathize in that depression, and you will find general stagnation, despondency, perhaps ruin, around all the tobacco markets and manufactories. Agriculture, commerce, all trade will share in the general decline.

Senators may speak lightly on the moment about the 4 cents tax on the tobacco which is left over. It may seem a small matter. Let any Senator apply the principle to his own business and ask himself what effect it would have upon that business on the 1st day of January to suffer a change of 25 per cent. in its value. Mr. President, the net profit of any legitimate business does not exceed generally 6 per cent. That business does well which pays 6 per cent. profit, and when you strike 25 per cent from the gross value of all business what must be the effect upon it and everything related to it?

What wrong will this rebate do? What injury will it inflict? Will Senators at this time of our national life, will Senators, with the light of the world shining upon this young Republic, tell us that upon a question of justice to the American citizen we must stand by and be halted by an argument of convenience or of difficulty? Sir, I know I speak the sentiment of every man in the Republic when I declare that if one citizen of this Republic was deprived of his liberty for an hour in Russia, in Germany, in France, or in England, the people of the country would rise up as one man and send millions of money and millions of lives to vindicate its citizen and its honor.

We would not dream of thinking of the inconvenience, of the difficulty in our way. But you turn around—I speak it in no disrespectful sense, for I have no more appropriate words to use—you turn around and rob your own people because it gives the Treasury Department some inconvenience and some trouble to do them justice. Then you must retire from the line of justice, you must fall back upon convenience and custom and leave the citizen to suffer and be victimized because justice is troublesome or expensive. If the manufacturer makes money by it, as has been suggested, the people suffer by it, because the money is paid by the consumer after all, and if the manufacturer makes somebody must suffer. But I deny that the manufacturer, that anybody in honest occupation can make money by such variations in legislation without any compensation.

Mr. President, I repeat, what harm will the rebate do? Let us look at the great difficulty; let us measure this monster that affrights the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Is not every tobacco manufacturer in the Republic well known? Are they not all listed, numbered, located in certain districts and divisions, and are not they constantly and habitually supervised and inspected? Are not the collectors, the tobacco inspectors, the revenue agents familiar with the business that is done by each one of the tobacco dealers and tobacco manufacturers? Does not every dealer in the United States have a license; is not every dealer required to make a certificate of the tobacco which he has sold; and does not the amendment demand that a certificate of what is on hand must be made in thirty days after the reduction occurs?

I ask you, Senators, if in a case of admitted justice, a case, the right of which no man can dispute, the Government will take money out of the citizens' pockets and not give an equivalent for it, when by its own act the citizens must suffer? I ask you if it is right to weigh a consideration of right, moral and legal right, against the petty inconvenience which the Government may encounter, or the possible loss it will suffer from fraud on the revenue?

Senators may say that this is too small a subject to discuss seriously, but above all other considerations let this country by the side of its love for liberty preserve its sense of justice without a blemish or a doubt.

Mr. President, I feel a deep interest in the tobacco manufacturers of the South, for it is of them that I have special knowledge. I have watched their history with pride and delight. I know that I am right in declaring that no class of our people, that no commercial industry in the land is doing more for the development and improvement of our section of the Union than the tobacco manufacturers. As a rule they are bold, enterprising, intelligent, public-spirited men. They began their business in a time of great trial and with the smallest means. Their only capital was their industry, their courage, and their character.

By these qualities they have established a young trade which penetrates every part of this country and has been extended across the oceans to the eastern continents. Their resources are numbered by thousands, hundreds of thousands and millions, the conquests of their excellence in all the branches of their business. They have given an impulse to Southern manufacturing which has quickened every pursuit and interest in that section, and is an example of the success that will attend every art well followed in the South. In my own State they have already built magnificent trade-houses, founded beautiful and happy villages, established successful markets, and stimulated agriculture, education, and all the arts. And all this without bounty or privilege from the Government, but under the burdens of a most exorbitant and variable tax. Such men and such interests should command equity from the Government. They deserve it. They pay annually $50,000,000 revenue to the Government. They demand only justice. Shall it be said that this great Republic will refuse justice to any man, to any interest upon its soil?

The country possesses the monopoly in fact of the tobacco production of the world, and it is our duty and should be our policy to foster and protect it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am just beginning to understand this tobacco discussion. I listened with great interest to my venerable friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day when he presented to us a pathetic picture of this agricultural production and how it was depressed in every part of our country, and now my friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] comes and informs us that this tobacco trade is in a splendid condition, that villages and cities are growing up where tobacco grows, and that we are extending our sales of tobacco into other regions and into other countries, that we have a monopoly of the production of tobacco. The Senator from Kentucky the other day, and nearly every Senator who has spoken thus far on the tobacco question, has informed us that this is an agricultural product that we are taxing, and that when we reduce the taxes we are benefiting the tiller of the soil, the man who puts his hand to the plow and prepares day by day this tobacco for sale, that it is a raw product, and that if we reduce the tobacco tax we are dividing the reduction of the tax in its benefits equally or nearly equally between the producer of tobacco and the consumer of tobacco. But there is nothing in this whole argument with reference to the reduction of the tax on tobacco unless it be that it is an agricultural product and that the reduction is to benefit the producer of the raw material.

But what do we find on the heels of that? We find the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] coming in with an amendment that proposes to refund to the dealers in tobacco the full amount of the difference in the tax, and yet we have heard as an argument for the reduction of the tobacco tax over and over again that the price of the tobacco will only be reduced by about one-half the amount of the diminution of the tax and that the other half will be made up in the increased cost of the tobacco on the farm, and yet the Senator from Virginia comes in now and insists that we shall vote the benefit to the dealers, who are only going to lose one-half of the loss occasioned by the reduction of the tax, that those dealers shall have the full amount of the reduction of tax at once paid to them, when it is admitted, or else there is no argument at all for the reduction of the tax, that the producer of the tobacco is to receive one-half, or at least a large portion of this benefit.

With that fact given absolutely as a reason why we should reduce the tax upon tobacco, immediately following the statement of it, we are confronted with the amendment of the Senator from Virginia that we shall put into the pockets of the dealers and manufacturers one-half the whole amount of the reduction of the tax—the whole of it the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] suggests. Is there anything fair in such a proposition as that, or do Senators who vote for it believe that the price of tobacco will be reduced by an amount equal to the taxation taken off? I pause for a reply from my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. RANSOM. I do not know that I quite comprehended the interrogatory of the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I will reiterate it so that the Senator can comprehend it. The proposition adopted was to reduce the tax on manufactured tobacco 4 cents a pound; and now the proposition is made to pay to the man who has already paid 16 cents a pound the difference between 12 and 16, or 4 cents. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that the price of the tobacco will be reduced 4 cents a pound because of the reduction of the tax? I want an answer to that.

Mr. RANSOM. I think the price of the manufactured article may be reduced to that extent; but here is what I say——

Mr. ALLISON. I want the Senator to give me his judgment whether it will be reduced 4 cents a pound or not.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Iowa thinks that to-day I am going into a long discussion here as to who pays the tax, whether the producer or the consumer, he is mistaken. I shall not do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask that.

Mr. RANSOM. I do not presume the Senator asks me to do that; but here is what I say: I say that when a manufacturer or a dealer has paid 16 cents tax to the Government and then the Government reduces that tax 4 cents, down to 12 cents a pound, the man who paid that tax loses 4 cents by that operation, and the Government ought to protect him, and it is immaterial who else may gain or who else may lose. To allow him the 4 cents is an act of simple justice and should be discharged by the Government. Having taken the man's money without an equivalent and changed the law themselves, the Government should put him where he would be if the law had not been changed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The question is smply this: the 16-cent tobacco comes in competition with the 12-cent tobacco, and unless the man who has paid the higher rate gets a rebate of the 4 cents he is bound to lose.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I want to put the question to the Senator from Kentucky, is the whole of the 4 cents lost to the dealer who holds the tobacco? In other words, is the reduction of 4 cents in the tax on tobacco equivalent to a reduction in its price?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think some of it goes to the producer.

Mr. RANSOM. For the first time I now understand the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sorry I did not make myself understood before.

Mr. RANSOM. No doubt it was my fault; I did not mean to intimate that it was the fault of the Senator from Iowa. Now I will answer him. I will take the case of a tobacco dealer who has one hundred pounds of tobacco on hand on the 1st day of January, 1883, on which he has paid 16 cents tax. That day the Government reduces the tax to 12 cents. His neighbor over the street, another dealer, has no tobacco on hand, and he buys one hundred pounds of tobacco at the 12 cents tax. Does not the Senator from Iowa know that the man who holds the one hundred pounds of tobacco on which he has paid 16 cents a pound tax must take four cents off the price to compete with his neighbor who pays only 12 cents tax?

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for that answer. I did not know the fact he states, and the reason I did not know it was that the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators here have made an argument for the reduction of the tax on tobacco on the ground that it was an agricultural product, and that we must look out for the interest of the agriculturists who were producing tobacco. Now I learn for the first time that the whole amount of this tax is paid by the consumer, that the reduction is no benefit whatever to the agriculturist; and here we have now a proposition to take back the entire amount paid, or the difference between the 16 cents charge and the 12 cents charge, to the dealer. Why? Because the consumer will get the tobacco at a rate 4 cents less, so that the agriculturists of North Carolina and Virginia who are engaged in this laudable business of producing tobacco for the foreign market, which has so grown of late, and for our own consumption, are not benefited one stiver according to the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, and it is only the man who smokes and chews and uses tobacco that is manufactured who gets the benefit of this reduction of the tax.

Mr. RANSOM. I know the Senator from Iowa is seeking for light on this matter, and if he is wrong he wishes to know it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. RANSOM. I think the Senator is satisfied that the dealer will lose 4 cents. He agrees to that. Now, let me show him the effect upon the farmer, the planter. The tobacco manufacturer and the tobacco dealer, seeing this trouble in the near future of a loss of 4 cents on each pound of tobacco, immediately call a halt. The farmer sends his tobacco to market. The manufacturer says, "I do not want to buy any tobacco now; I have all on hand that I want. This new tax goes into effect on the 1st day of January, and I must not increase my stock. I do not want to have a large stock and pay heavy taxes on it. I want to sell what I have." The dealer says to the farmer he will not buy tobacco because he does not know whether he can sell it in time before the new law goes into effect. What is the result? When the farmer sends his tobacco to market there is no demand for it. French merchants, German merchants, English merchants, seeing that the American demand is depressed, will cut down immediately, lower their prices, and tobacco will fall down low, and the poor farmer has to sell it at what he can get.

Let me tell the Senator from Iowa one fact; almost every Senator here knows the fact; the Senator from Delaware knows it; the Senator from Kentucky knows it, and the Finance Committee know it. Other Senators know it, for it was in the newspapers before. The fear of the reduction of the tax on tobacco produced such a paralysis of the whole trade that the Messrs. Lorillard, of New York, the largest dealers in the country, believing that the tax would not be reduced, sent a written contract to each one of their customers in the United States binding themselves if the changed tax did go into effect to make a rebate of the tax upon their sales, and so great an effect did it have upon the trade that almost every tobacco dealer in this country, as the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Kentucky and my colleague well know, rose up and tried to resist it, because they said it would give the Lorillards a monopoly of the tobacco trade of the country. With that fact I leave the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to ascertain why it was that we are to give this rebate.

Mr. MAHONE. One minute, if the Senator will allow me. It strikes me that he is presenting one proposition and arguing another. He wants to know what effect on the producer is the payment back of this advanced tax of 4 cents. The payment back of the rebate is not proposed by anybody here to operate on the producer, but the reduction of the tax is a very different question. It can be shown that the reduction of the tax would stimulate the production.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, I think I understand the Senator from Virginia. He seems to think that we ought to give this rebate because it is an honest thing to do, and that it will have the same effect as suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, and that is the dealer will lose unless we do it; and yet in the same breath he tells us that production will be stimulated so that the profits will not be reduced. That is a sort of logic that I cannot comprehend.

I know perfectly well, and the Senator from North Carolina need not undertake in any roundabout way to tell me the effect of agitation upon the trade of the country. He and other Senators need not tell me that agitation has the effect to paralyze the industries of our country. Every agitation of the tax question affecting great industries has a tendency to do that thing. Do we not all know that by the throwing in here of the sugar question we have practically paralyzed the sugar market for the time being, because in view of our proposition to reduce the duties 25 per cent. men who believe that we mean to accomplish what we propose are not willing to buy sugars pending that proposition unless they can buy with a certainty or something approaching it. So the sugar dealers are gambling today, if I may use that word, as to whether or not we are to be able to pass this bill at this session of Congress, or whether by some system of legerdemain, either in this House or somewhere else, the bill will be finally defeated.

So it is with the tobacco tax. I have no doubt that the tobacco business is this day paralyzed from one end of this country to the other. Why? Because there is a proposition here to reduce the tax 25 per cent., and nobody knows yet whether or not it may not be reduced 50 per cent., or from 16 to 8 cents a pound. That is the thing that is paralyzing this great industrial interest of tobacco, paralyzing whatever may be held by dealers or by manufacturers.

But now we are told that it is an honest thing to pay back the tax that has been received, and that a failure to pay it back is dishonest. I am amazed at some of the suggestions made with reference to that question. I am amazed at my venerable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I call him venerable, not for his years, but for his long service in the two Houses of Congress. He has just waked up this moment to the idea that a rebate is an honest thing, and not to give it a dishonest thing. He seems to have forgotten that during the long years that he has served in this House and the other, often at the head of the Ways and Means Committee, changing the taxes, putting money into men's pockets and taking money out of men's pockets, according to this theory, it never occurred to him before that it was an honest thing to give a rebate. We reduced the tax in 1872, when he was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, to the uniform rate of 20 cents, when the rate before had been 32 cents.

Mr. DAWES. When did it take effect?

Mr. ALLISON. No matter when it took effect, according to this theory of the Senator. This is proposed to take effect at a time so remote as to enable all the stamped tobacco at 16 cents to be sold; yet the Senator from Massachusetts, when he reduced the rate from 32 cents to 20 cents, never dreamed of the idea of giving a rebate of 12 cents. It was never suggested to him then by anybody that not to do that thing was a dishonesty. I have the statute before me, but I will not take time to see whether that act went into effect immediately or at some future day. I know that in the year 1878, when we reduced the tax from 24 cents to a uniform rate of 16 cents, making a difference of 8 cents in the rate of taxation upon the great body of the tobacco of this country—because the 24 per cent. reduction was on tobacco that entered most largely into consumption, and was the tobacco from which we received the most revenue, the 16-cent tobacco being only smoking-tobacco—when we made that great reduction of 8 cents no proposition was sustained in either House, and I do not remember even that it was made, for a rebate of the 8 cents.

Mr. BAYARD. That is true, but at the same time there was the accompanying fact that the trade, in common with the whole country, had notice that the reduction was about to take place. The House passed the bill for the reduction in the spring and we passed the bill for the reduction in the following spring, and the consequence was that from the natural apprehension of the reduction of duty the stocks were diminished as much as possible. But I want to say this to my friend from Iowa, that that was accompanied with great suffering. I have had scenes described to me in those vast factories, in which the operatives were numbered by thousands, that would make any man with a heart within his breast feel how serious, what a really serious and tragical thing it is to be dealing in this way with great public laws that affect the earnings of so many thousand people.

The result was that, anticipating the decline of the tax which was an accepted fact, delayed, postponed, but certain in the future, the tobacco trade became paralyzed and lessened day by day. First the manufacturers lowered the wages as low in point of scale as they could, then they diminished the days on which men could work and women could work and children—for all of these are concerned in this tobacco manufacture; and I can see to-day the faces of those women and children growing whiter and whiter and thinner and thinner as the period approached at which the reduced rate of duty should take place. It was by such processes that we avoided the question of a rebate of duty.

But I say to my friend, who I am satisfied means to legislate fairly for the people of this country—I am sorry that it makes some gentlemen smile, but it is true and they ought not to smile—that great public laws are pregnant with the most fearful consequences to the people who are affected by them; and I have learned that in my experience of legislation, if I have learned nothing else. You did postpone the reduction of the tax and you prolonged the agony. Now what is your remedy for that? Make your change in taxation immediate, but do grant some relief to those who have paid the tax fully demanded by your law and ask you a rebate for it. I think that is the remedy. I will agree that the question is difficult. We may throw upon the officers of the department of revenue additional trouble in settling these claims; but you must either do one of two things: enable the people who hold stock which has paid the tax to your Government time to work it off, or you must grant them some relief, fairly and equitably, which your laws must provide. I will not say it is not troublesome; I will not say that it will not open the door to fraudulent claims; but I do say that it only throws upon us some of the difficulties and the trouble of providing the machinery to meet this end.

I want that done. I want something done. I think perhaps if you extend the time you paralyze the trade until that time shall arrive; but I do believe that there can be a remedy and there ought to be one. I include myself in those who are called upon to assist in furnishing a remedy, and I will assist as well as I may. But I do say when a man has paid a tax to his government in good faith and the government chooses suddenly to change that tax, there ought to be some relief given to the man who has paid it.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the statement made by the Senator from Delaware just now that there is difficulty here, but I submit that the proposed amendment does not meet the difficulty as it ought to be met.

Who will be injured by this proposed change? The Senator from Delaware says he has seen faces growing paler day by day, working in these factories, when the reduction of taxes that took place has been postponed to a future day. I do not see why that should necessarily follow. If these manufacturers are to find a market for their products, they are not obliged to attach their stamps on these products until the manufactured tobacco leaves the bonded warehouse or the manufacturer's warehouse.

The manufacture of tobacco under this system has grown up to be in a sense a monopoly. The manufacture of most of the tobacco in this country is in great hands. The Lorillards have been spoken of. They are great manufacturers. There are great manufacturers in Cincinnati, in Detroit, in Lynchburgh. The effect of a tax upon this article or upon any article has a tendency to require large amounts of capital to conduct the business, and so it has been with tobacco, with whisky, and with matches, as was so well stated the other day. If these people know certainly that on the 1st day of January they are to find a renewed and stimulated market by the reduction of the tax they will go on manufacturing day by day and month by month until that time comes, and I submit to Senators that no serious injury will result if the day of taking effect of the reduced tax is postponed to the 1st of January. If that is not long enough postpone it to another month. The entire tobacco crop of this year will have been manufactured and used up before the 1st of January. The new crop will practically come in under the new and stimulated market, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] The men who are now growing tobacco, according to his ideas and theories, will receive some of this advantage. I do not believe a word of it.

Now, let us look a little further into the details of this proposition. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia does not apply alone to tobacco, as I understand it. If I am mistaken in that I shall be glad to be corrected. It applies——

Mr. LOGAN. It applies to tobacco and snuff.

Mr. ALLISON. It applies to tobacco in all its forms, and nothing else.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, other articles.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not intended to apply only to tobacco?

Mr. MAHONE. Tobacco, snuff, and cigars.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I trust the Senator from Virginia will modify his amendment so as to make that perfectly clear, because, on reading it I supposed it applied to other articles of manufacture besides tobacco.

Mr. RANSOM. That can be changed.

Mr. ALLISON. I want that made clear that it is only intended to apply to tobacco.

Now, let me see how this will operate in detail. Senators say there is no difficulty in fixing this matter. I submit that there is great difficulty in fixing it. In the first place you must reach not only the manufacturers, for the manufacturers long before the 1st of January will cease to put on the 16-cent stamp. There is nothing in the amendment which has the slightest effect on the manufacturers of tobacco, not even on the manufacturers of cigars. The practical effect of the amendment is to reach only large and small dealers. You are compelled to deal with over 500,000 people, and you are compelled to state an account with each of them, and you are compelled in the main to rely upon those dealers for the integrity with which they make their returns with reference to the packages they have in their hands.

I submit that that will cost not less than from three to five million dollars in money that must be paid out of the Treasury, and you must appropriate that sum if you wish to carry out the provisions of the amendment. I submit again that a great many people will commit frauds because opportunities will be offered, and when opportunity is presented frauds are always committed. Opportunities will be offered to commit large and small frauds with reference to the amount of stamp taxation actually paid. I submit that it is wiser and better to postpone the day of these reduced taxes until such time as that the old stock of 16-cent tobacco can be worked off, and dealers will be readily and quickly supplied with prepared manufactured but not stamped new tobacco till after the 1st day of January.

The Senator from Massachusetts was shocked beyond measure that I should suggest that in California, where it took a stock of cigars or tobacco thirty days to reach there, the dealers there would lose nothing because the tobacco stamped at the new 12-cent rate could not reach there for thirty days, and therefore they would have thirty days longer to work off their old stock on hand than the dealers in Boston or Cincinnati who were living under the shadow of the manufacturers of tobacco.

I believe that it is wise for us as practical legislators to follow the precedents which have existed for these fifteen years with reference to the changing of taxes and tariffs, and to refuse to give rebates with reference to any changes in the taxes. We have never found, at least not to my knowledge, and I have been connected more or less with this legislation for many years, that the system worked serious harm or injury to anybody. I confess that my experience and observation do not teach me that any great hardship has resulted from these changes without giving rebates.

But now, as I am up, I want to say one word further upon this question of the tobacco tax. I am not responsible for bringing it in here. I am not responsible for this agitation of the subject now at the heels of the session. I believe it would have been wise for us to have postponed the consideration of the tobacco tax not only this year but next year until we shall have seen what else will be done with the varied industries of our country and the various taxes that are now imposed, not upon luxuries but upon necessities for the great body of the people. I assert here without fear of successful contradiction that in the whole range of manufactured products there is not a product upon your list of taxes that can so well bear taxation as tobacco. I know of no useful thing that tobacco can be applied to in its manufactured form. It is the most essential luxury there is in this country or in any country to-day, far more so than distilled spirits and alcohol, because the result of an agricultural product also, distilled spirits enter largely into the arts and the manufactures and the industries of our country and other countries; but tobacco the world over is recognized as a pure article of luxury and cannot be utilized for any purpose known to civilized man save and except purposes of luxurious consumption.

Now, what should be the measure of tax upon such an article? I assert here, without fear of successful contradiction, that the measure of that tax should be the largest amount of revenue consistent with honest and faithful collection; and I assert here again, in the face of what I have already heard from the two Senators who have argued this question, that this is an article the tax on which does not affect the producer of the raw material in its price, if the tax only be moderate. It is such an article of luxury as that the whole tax is paid by the consumer. So, whether the tax be 12 cents a pound or 16 cents, if that be a reasonable tax, the consumer pays it all, and I submit the consumer is entitled to pay his reasonable proportion of the necessary revenues of the Government on an article that is not essential in any way to the comfort of a family or a home. It is an article that the consumer pays the tax upon, for, as was stated by the Senator from North Carolina, we have practically a monopoly of its production. Three-fifths and more than three-fifths of all the tobacco produced in this country is consumed abroad; it goes to France, to Spain, and to Italy where it is sold as an absolute monopoly by the governments themselves, and to other countries in large quantities. Therefore the price here is affected by not only the consumption in our own country but the consumption in foreign countries, and I venture the assertion, without fear of successful contradiction, that at 16 cents a pound the tax is not excessive upon the consumer, that all the tobacco that will be consumed in this country at 12 cents a pound will be consumed at 16 cents a pound. Hence the difference is a difference to the Treasury alone upon this article essentially of luxury, and not an article of necessity. So, then, for myself I am opposed at this time to the reduction of the tax on tobacco below 16 cents a pound.

We have heard over and over again in this Chamber that we receive this year from the tax upon tobacco more than we have ever received at any other rate. If that proves anything, it proves that we have at last reached the proper rate of tax to secure the largest consumption of this article of luxury. If we have reached that point, I submit we ought not to change it; and although I have high respect for the judgment of my friend from Delaware on these questions as to the rate of tax, I do not believe that at 12 cents or at 8 cents or at any figure below 16 cents we shall receive the amount of revenue we do at 16 cents per pound.

Senators, if we are to change this rate at all I first want that it shall be put at 12 cents, and then I want every safeguard that is now thrown around the collection of this tax to be maintained on your statute-book, and I want to fix such a time in the future as will enable all the holders of this article having paid 16 cents as dealers to get rid of their stock on hand; and so far as manufacturers are concerned that is a dead letter to them, because long before the 1st day of January they will have filled their manufactories and bonded warehouses with manufactured tobacco upon which they will have placed no stamps at all, so that there will be no need of any legislative provision to secure a rebate for them.

When I rose I intended to occupy but a few moments of time. I regret that I have spoken so long.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if this debate so far this morning has done nothing more it has certainly developed the fact that those of us who opposed the reduction of the tax on tobacco were nearer correct than our friends who were in favor of it. I was opposed to the reduction of the tax on tobacco for many reasons. I am now in favor of giving a rebate to those people who shall have paid the tax on tobacco at the time this bill shall go into active operation. I am in favor of a rebate of the tax for the reason that if the Government of the United States demands a tax upon any article, it makes no difference of what character that article may be, and then while the manufacturer has that article in possession with the amount of tax paid to the Government and the Government takes it upon itself to reduce the tax while this amount is on hand, it seems to me that it is nothing more than just and honest that the Government should at least give back the amount of money that has been paid for the unsold property, no matter what it may be.

I cannot understand how it is that a government dealing with its citizens can deem it an honest and just transaction to require money to be paid by a party as revenue to the government and then that government shall deprive the party of the benefit of that amount paid and shall refuse to give him the reduction or pay it back. I cannot understand that as an honest way of dealing with a citizen.

In reference to the effect of this rebate of taxation let us examine that for a moment and see whether or not it is as has been stated by Senators on this floor. The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Vermont say that a rebate applicable to any article subject to taxation is calculated to produce fraud and to increase the number of persons employed by the Government for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in regard to the reduction of taxation. They say it is calculated to produce embarrassment and to give trouble far beyond that which is necessary in the collection of the tax assessed by the Government. I should like to say in answer to that, that it is not a question for the Senate to determine to-day or at any other time what amount of trouble is imposed upon the officers of the Government for the purpose of carrying out or executing a law. That is not the question. The question to be determined is whether or not it is just to do and perform the act. If it is, it is not a question for the Government what amount of trouble will be imposed upon the officers of the Government. Trouble is a thing that is incident to every act the Government performs in reference to the assessment and collection of taxes or revenue. That trouble is incumbent upon the Government; it is a part of the levying, assessing, and collecting of taxes. We should not act to-day, then, by reference to which will be the greater or the less trouble, but what will be the greater justice to the individual after the Government has exercised its right, and exercised finally its right, and allowed the citizen to exercise his right as against the Government in making his application for that which is just to him.

There is one other thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate in reference to this question of taxation. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] said great embarrassment was produced when the tax on tobacco was reduced before, great distress in the trade, great confusion, great wrong, bankruptcy in many instances ensued. That is true, and the very same state of things will exist again. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that his proposition for a reduction of the tax to 12 cents on the pound of tobacco is a proposition for the benefit of the manufacturer of and dealer in tobacco, and not a proposition for the benefit of the producer or the consumer of tobacco. I have had a telegram from one of the largest manufacturing establishments in my region, stating that this would be no benefit to the consumer of tobacco, and it will be none.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me, as he has referred to that, to ask if that is the fact, which I deny, can these men not very well afford to go on without rebate? The Senator is in favor of a rebate, and yet he says those who ask for the rebate will get the benefit of the reduction. They may go on without the rebate if they get that much benefit.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is not the manufacturer of tobacco; he sells to the merchant, the merchant sells to the retailer. I speak of the sale to the consumer. The consumer does not buy it by the hogshead; he buys it by the plug, by the pound, and so on, and I am speaking of that individual. The manufacturer and the seller of the tobacco will not reduce it. When it comes to the consumer of a pound of tobacco he will not get it one farthing less than he would have received it had you kept the tax at 16 cents on the pound. That is my honest conviction, and it is the judgment of some of the best tobacco dealers and manufacturers in this country. But because it goes into the hands of retail dealers, and they keep the price the same as it was when the manufacturer paid 16 cents tax per pound, that is no reason why the manufacturer should be defrauded of 4 cents a pound by the Government and the Government get the benefit and the other party lose the amount. One act does not justify the other; one reason does not support the other.

My own judgment is that when taxes are levied and when we get to what we understand is the revenue point, that point in reduction where you get the largest amount of revenue so as not to bear too heavily on the consumer, on the producer, or on the manufacturer, the less you disturb the question the greater benefit it is to the people generally. My judgment is that tobacco when reduced to 16 cents came down to the revenue point, and every time you touch it from that on going down lower you derange the sale, the transfer, the business; you derange it all over the country in such a way as to produce commotion in the trade and lead to disaster. I believe that honestly. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue thinks that is true. I understand the Secretary of the Treasury and men who are conversant with the collection of taxes on tobacco and cigars, &c., have satisfied themselves that it is true. If this is so what benefit is the Government to derive, what benefit is the country to derive, from this reduction of 4 cents per pound? I should like to know that.

I can see nothing whatever in this effort on the part of Senators to reduce the tobacco tax 4 cents a pound, except for the purpose of benefiting the dealers in tobacco and at the same time not helping the producer or the consumer.

Mr. BECK. One word and I shall not interrupt the Senator further. Sixteen cents a pound is 200 per cent. on the average value of tobacco, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when the tax was 24 cents protested that we should lose $12,000,000 by reducing it to 16 cents. That shows of how little value his opinion is. One hundred per cent. on the value of anything is an uncommonly high tax, quite beyond the revenue point.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator has stated and restated that I do not know how many times, certainly so often that it will not be forgotten very soon in the Senate. It is a mere question of judgment, not a question of statement, for we have had that frequently over and over again. I do not agree with the Senator. I have not stated my view quite as often and perhaps not so well as he has stated his; but I believe what I say about it.

I do not say that this proposition is merely for the ear of those who produce tobacco in the South. I will not say that; but if it is to encourage them still in believing that their friends are reducing taxation for their benefit, I say to them that it is a delusion; they will not find the benefit that they expect to find from it; they will not in any sense whatever derive the benefit that their friends have told them they would derive from it, and in less than twelve months from this date they will understand that they have not been benefited by this reduction that has been made.

Now, Mr. President, there is one other thing that I rose to say——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Right at that point will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry of him? Does he think that the tax on tobacco, let the tax be what it may, has any effect on production? I understand from his argument that he does not consider that this reduction of the tax on tobacco will affect the producer at all. Now, I ask him whether the tax, let it be what it may, affects the production?

Mr. LOGAN. I was replying to the statements that were made by both Senators from Kentucky when they said it would affect the producer, and the great argument was made by one of the Senators from Kentucky that because he was a tobacco producer himself he knew it would benefit the producer. I do not agree with him. I was restating his proposition, not my own.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator does not agree with them. Then I ask him the question whether the tax imposed on tobacco affects the production of it at all? That is the point that I desire to have the Senator's opinion upon.

Mr. LOGAN. My opinion perhaps would not agree with that of the Senator. I do not see that it would benefit the producer in the least. I do not think it affects the production of tobacco, unless it is made excessive, and I do not see how it can. I know it has been argued that it does, but I do not believe it does unless the tax is onerous. If it is, it may affect the production of tobacco, but it would not in my judgment in any other way.

If there is a reduction of the tax on tobacco, following that will come, as a matter of course, from the friends of the reduction of the tax on tobacco, very soon, I do not know when, a reduction of the tax on something else that seems to be a great product in some of the Southern States, and a product in my State. I want to call the attention of my friends from that part of the country to this proposition: I have heard a great deal said, not particularly in speech from that side of the Chamber, but in other ways, in the newspapers of that portion of the country, about education in the South, and the want of education there. I do not wish to discuss that. God knows education is needed so far as the people generally are concerned. Nobody questions that, nobody doubts it; the statistics show it.

I and many others in my section of the country having my kind of politics have been in favor and are in favor now of giving the surplus revenues of this country to a very great extent for the education of the people, and I have proposed to do it so as not to interfere with the common-school system of the States. I have proposed to do it by turning over to the States themselves, to their people, money to aid their own common-school system under certain restrictions, and those restrictions only were that they should have schools open so many months in each year and that the benefits should apply to every child in the country. Our people to-day and all over the North nearly are in favor of it; but you, gentlemen, by your votes are taking the tax off the very articles that produce the surplus revenue in our country that will accumulate so that we can make a fund for the benefit of those who are illiterate. If this reduction goes on and the taxes are reduced until the amount of revenue realized is all necessary for the machinery of the Government as it now exists without applying any of it in the way I have suggested, the opportunity to aid education is cut off in my judgment. I agree with what has been said by honorable Senators on this side of the Chamber; I would levy a tax on tobacco, whisky, beer, and everything of that sort in order to make a surplus revenue, so that the people of this country might receive the benefit in the way of the education of the children of this land. I have advocated that on this floor. I will advocate it again on this floor, at home and elsewhere, and if honorable Senators deprive us who are willing to aid you in this particular of the facilities for doing it, it is your own fault and not ours.

It always strikes me as a very strange and curious kind of infatuation that seems to seize men that because a certain article is produced in their own part of the country, therefore to satisfy their constituents that they are great statesmen and legislators they must always harangue the country upon the taxes imposed on their particular product. That is not good economy; it is not wise legislation, in my judgment. Products in my country are taxed as well as yours, and it is not well or wise for us to seize upon the product that bears a tax easily, that bears a tax without complaint and without being felt so far as the people are concerned, and reduce the tax on that product, so that there is a necessity to put the same amount of taxation on something else.

I repeat what I said the other day, the very Senators in this Chamber who are crying out against the tariff system of this country are doing the very act that the men who are in favor of the highest protection in this land desire them to do. They are playing into their hands, and they are chuckling over it now that the men who talk about free trade in this country are playing into the hands of the protectionists; and so you are. Every dollar you take off tobacco, every dollar you take off whisky, every dollar you take off beer is playing into the hands of the protectionists of this land. I am a protective-tariff man myself to a certain extent, perhaps not so extreme as some men are, but certainly extreme enough. I say to you now that if I wanted to build a wall around this country so that no product from any other country could come inside of it, I would want to reduce every tax that is levied on articles by the internal-revenue system, so that all the money required to carry on the Government should be collected by a protective tariff, and thereby prevent the products of other countries coming into this land.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. Suppose that all the internal-revenue taxation were repealed now, where would the Senator from Illinois proceed to create or to raise the revenue that would be lost by cutting off the internal-revenue taxes, and how would he proceed to raise it?

Mr. LOGAN. If I were to give medicine to a sick man I would certainly want to know how to give something else to produce a certain character of action with that medicine without asking somebody else to do it. If the Senator helps to take a tax off now, he is the gentleman to answer that question himself, and not I.

Mr. VANCE. I will say very briefly how I would undertake to do it, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. VANCE. I would proceed to lower the tariff to a point that would raise the amount of revenue necessary to support the Government. I would not allow the tariff to go to a point that was prohibitory and therefore brought in no revenue.

Mr. LOGAN. I can see exactly how the Senator would do that. If the Senator was in a majority and that majority agreed with him, it would be very easy for him to do that; but inasmuch as he is not, and inasmuch as his own party do not agree with him altogether, and inasmuch as he cannot do the thing that he talks about, he is only producing the result he does not want. When the Senator comes to a reduction of the tariff, he may find some of his own friends disagreeing with him on certain articles that he would want to reduce. He would probably find as much disagreement among his own friends as he would anywhere else.

Mr. VANCE. We should be obliged to do it in order to raise revenue. There would be no difference of opinion on that subject.

Mr. LOGAN. Would there not? If you can convince a high-protective-tariff man of that I should like you to go at it. I do not think you can. I know that it is the old-fashioned Democratic argument that has always been made, but you have failed to convince the people of this country of it, and inasmuch as you have failed heretofore I do not expect you will succeed in the future. You cannot convince this country of any such thing. There are certain things, as far as we on this side are concerned, that we believe should be reduced, for a reason that it is not necessary to give. I did not intend to enter into this discussion, nor do I now, but I only intended to say that the course pursued by Senators who claim that they desire a reduction of the tariff system of taxation, as they call it, is the very course that will not produce the result they profess to desire.

Mr. President, the Senators do not thank me perhaps for any such argument as this to them.

Mr. MORGAN. We are in a minority and cannot help ourselves.

Mr. LOGAN. You cannot help yourselves?

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. LOGAN. I presume, however, that as I state this in good nature to them as my judgment, it is certainly not offensive.

Mr. MORGAN. We will receive the advice, but we cannot help ourselves. We cannot get the Senator's assistance to get us out of trouble.

Mr. LOGAN. My assistance to help you out of what trouble?

Mr. MORGAN. The trouble of making the tariff and internal tax correspond by taking off the tax on tobacco, and making it necessary that the duty should be high on imports.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say to the Senator that within a few short years his friends have been in the majority in both ends of this Capitol, and I fail to ascertain by examination of the record that they have undertaken to reduce the tariff. I fail to see that they have done that which they suppose now they will accomplish after awhile.

Mr. SHERMAN. They reduced the duty on quinine.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes; I do remember that they did make a reduction in favor of chills and fever. They reduced the tariff on quinine, and immediately it went up higher than it was before. I believe they did accomplish that great feat of statesmanship in regard to the reduction of the revenues of the country, but that is the only one I remember.

I find by reading a newspaper the manner in which they propose to do it, especially over in the State of Ohio, and I want to read it, because I want them to understand it.

Mr. MORGAN. Allow me, before the Senator reads the extract, to say this: perhaps if he had lectured us so vigorously during the time we had control of both Houses as he does now we might have effected something, at least with his assistance.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not lecturing the Senator. The Senator is very much mistaken. I am not doing any such thing. I am only giving my views as to the effect of this; and inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Alabama wanted to interrogate me about the tariff, I should like to read a resolution that it may go in the RECORD, to stand there until somebody can explain it, for I cannot, I am sure:

Resolved, That we favor a tariff levied to meet the actual needs of the Government,—

You are for that, I suppose, are you not?—

and so adjusted in its details with a view to equality in the public burdens as to encourage productive industries and afford labor a just compensation without creating monopolies.

I merely want that to go on the record and stand there until somebody can explain it.

Mr. ALLISON. What is that?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the tariff resolution of the recent Ohio Democratic convention which met at Columbus last week. I have no doubt that it can be explained, but I want it to go on record as a Democratic statement of the condition of the party on the subject of the tariff and on the subject of protection and on the subject of monopolies, and to say to my friend from North Carolina that the Ohio Democracy are in favor of a tariff sufficient for the necessities of the Government; in other words, they are in favor of all the revenue that is raised being raised by a tariff. That is what it means. They are in favor of wiping out all the internal taxes and making the necessities of the Government rely wholly upon a tariff. You cannot read it any other way. Therefore I am sustained in what I have said, that the party here to-day are playing into the hands of the protectionists of the country by resolving in favor of wiping out all internal taxation and relying wholly upon the tariff for the revenues of the Government.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator seems to understand it after all.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the way I read it, but it does not seem to be according to the views of certain gentlemen here. I say if that is what it means then the Democracy of Ohio are in favor of all taxation being raised by assessment in our tariff laws.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VANCE. I simply desire to ask if he is for any more taxation than is required to meet the necessities of the Government? That is what I understand the Ohio platform to say—just so much tariff as will meet the necessities of the Government. I ask him if he is for any more?

Mr. LOGAN. I am for meeting the necessities of the Government by internal taxation and the tariff combined.

Mr. VANCE. You are in favor, then, of something to meet the necessities of the manufacturers, private individuals, besides the necessities of the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. That may be very sharp, but I cannot see it. That is an argument that you make that I deny, but that is no way to argue or reason about a proposition and say what another one is for. The best way is for you to say what you are for yourself, if you can ascertain that fact. Sometimes I have known persons unable to ascertain where they did stand themselves. Of course that does not apply to the Senator from North Carolina, because he ought to, and probably does, always understand where he is.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I want to say that so long as Senators on the other side of the Chamber persist in a reduction of the tax on tobacco and on whisky, which will come up finally, so long as you persist in the reduction of taxes on articles that the people of this country are in favor of paying taxes upon almost universally, for I have never yet found a man anywhere in this land who was not in favor of the taxation of tobacco and whisky, except those gentlemen who want to take it off for the benefit of the protectionists of the country——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to say that if everybody is in favor of it, there is not much danger of its being taken off.

Mr. LOGAN. I have never found a Democrat outside of this Chamber that was not in favor of taxing whisky and tobacco; at least in my experience in my country I never found one. I can find them here in the Senate Chamber. They may voice the wishes of their own constituents; I do not know as to that; but they certainly do not the constituents whom I represent.

As I said, I am in favor of a rebate on tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and all character of articles made from tobacco, because I believe it is just, I believe it is honest, I believe it is fair; and so far as the trouble that is going to come from it in connection with paying back this rebate is concerned, no matter whether it takes extra clerks or extra examiners or extra inspectors, that makes no difference. It is the duty of the Government to afford such force as is absolutely necessary to pay back the money that it obtained from these men. It has no right to the money, to the amount of the reduction of the tax on tobacco after it reduces the tax. The Government has no right to it; it does not belong to it. The very moment it passes a law to reduce the tax the amount so reduced does not belong to the Government, but belongs to the individual and it ought to be paid back.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the question is with reference to the rebate or repayment of the tax, and I admit that it has some complications to my mind. I should be glad to vote right upon it. I find that Senators, without much reference to the general question involved in the debate, are somewhat at a loss with reference to the merits of this proposition of the Senator from Virginia. I have examined it, and I find the original proposition reducing the tax to be this, that it shall take effect on the 1st day of next January. Until then the tax is to be paid as it has been hitherto. Now, it is proposed that on and after the 1st day of January next there shall be repaid to the manufacturer the tax which he may have paid upon unbroken packages existing at that date.

It seems to me that primarily the real question here is, what is to come into competition? Here is the crop of last year, which has been raised, harvested, sold by the producer to the manufacturer, manufactured principally, and gone to the dealer it may be, and the manufacturer or the dealer, in whosesoever hands it may be, now has from this time until next January, six months, in which to dispose of his stock upon which this taxation has been paid. That is, it seems to me, a very liberal allowance of time during which to dispose of the stock of manufactured tobacco which has already been taxed and upon which the tax has been paid.

The crop of this year is just starting from the ground. It has to be raised, harvested, cured, sold to the manufacturer, manufactured, disposed of to the dealer, and from him pass to the consumer. So that the crop of this year, which is the only thing that comes in competition with the crop of last year and the only one which is liable to tax at all, will not reach the market until next January or later.

All questions of rebate, then, have reference to last year's crop, and not to that which is at present in the ground. The crop that is in the ground, the crop that is being produced this year, is the only one in which the producer—the farmer—has any interest whatever. Therefore it is that this question touching the rebate in no way whatever has any bearing upon the interest of the producer, and he is out of the question; and we are dealing only with last year's crop, and not with the crop now in the ground, which is to be sold after next January.

We have eliminated, then, the producer, and the next individual that has anything to do with the tobacco crop, as any other crop, is the manufacturer, and it is to the manufacturer that the rebate is to be paid by the provisions of the amendment itself, and he is the only man that is to receive it. Now, in what way are the interests of the manufacturer affected?

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the tax does not have to be paid on manufactured tobacco until it is removed from the manufactory.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely; and that is the point.

Mr. HARRIS. The retailer is the only man who will be interested in the rebate.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator but anticipates my point. The manufacturer has placed the stamps upon so much as he has disposed of to the dealer.

Mr. HARRIS. So much as he has removed from the manufactory.

Mr. BLAIR. So much as he has removed from the manufactory, which is that which he has disposed of to the dealer. Then he has notice of the fact that he has until next January, and he will not make a package from this time forward on which he will pay the tax unless there is such a demand for it that he can afford to sell it at the cost to him, including the tax and all. Therefore the manufacturer is not interested; he is in no danger of loss; he has from now till next January to manufacture and he will pay for no more stamps than he can make his market for without loss. I would ask any gentleman, this being so, he affixing his stamp and paying for his stamp only when it is necessary to part with the manufactured article, how it is possible that the manufacturer is in any danger of loss whatever? He cannot be.

Mr. President, the proposition here is to repay to the manufacturer, the capitalist that we hear so much about, this man who comes here and has advocates on this floor, he is the only man to whom it is proposed to repay any money. If he is in no danger of losing money by the enactment of this law, and the point which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] suggested is the precise point I was about to make, and shows that he is in no such danger, why should the amendment prevail? Why should there be any rebate? Is it not, then, upon the showing of Senators themselves, upon the admitted facts, simply a proposition to pay the amount of this reduction of tax to the manufacturer, which will operate to him as an additional profit beyond what he could make if there were no reduction of the tax at all?

I would go further, and say that to the consumer it is a matter of no consequence, so far as the rebate is concerned, and it is to no human being a thing of the slightest consequence but to the manufacturer, and he is in no danger of loss if this bill should pass precisely as the amendment now stands. It is a proposition, pure and naked, to give to him this 4 cents beyond what he could make if we did not deal with this legislation. It seems to me that upon the admitted facts it is simply a monstrous attempt to rob the Treasury for the benefit of those men who already are, as our friends tell us, bloated monopolists.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we may now have a vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to propose to the Senator from Virginia a modification of his amendment, which I hope he will be willing to accept. The part of the House enactment stricken out by the Senate committee reads as follows:

Provided, That on all original unbroken packages of checks, matches, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the passage of this act, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the reduction.

I propose to add, after the word "reduction," the following:

Payable in stamps for taxes on manufactures of tobacco in any form.

Then I am willing to add also the other provision offered by the Senator from Virginia in regard to the statute of limitations, only I think it ought to be enlarged:

Provided, That the right to claim a rebate payable in stamps shall not extend to a period exceeding one hundred and twenty days from the time this act shall take effect.

I think perhaps one hundred and twenty days is a better allowance of time under the system that I present than the thirty days suggested by the Senator from Virginia. I propose that we shall take the House enactment as it is, introducing after the word "reduction," in line 15, page 4, the words "payable in stamps for taxes on manufactures of tobacco in any form;" so as to read:

There shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the reduction payable in stamps for taxes on manufactured tobacco in any form.

I do that rather than undertake to require a payment of money, because the stamps that may be issued in compensation for the difference between 16 cents and 12 cents a pound can be used by the manufacturers upon the article as it is manufactured and sent to the markets of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Alabama what difference that will make in our resources next year; if it will not diminish them to the same extent?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that our resources for next year are proposed to be reduced by this bill. As I said before when on the floor, if this was a bill to raise revenue I should have some difficulty, perhaps, in that question; but as it is a bill to reduce revenue, a bill to reduce taxation, a bill to cut down superfluous income into the Treasury, the question that is left for us to consider on such a bill as that is the method by which it can be done with the least disturbance to the manufacturer, to the producer, and to the consumer. Now, we merely, by the proposition I make, give a credit to the manufacturer or to the holder of the manufactured article in the original packages for the difference between 16 cents and 12 cents per pound upon the goods that he holds.

The Senator from Illinois has presented this subject in a very strong light. We ought not, in endeavoring to reduce taxes, to do it at the expense of any industry in the country; I care not whether it may be the manufacture of cigars, cheroots, snuff, tobacco, or what not; nor should we do it at the expense of the consumer or at the expense of the producer, if we can find means by which this can all be done without any friction at all. Now, I respectfully submit to the Senate that this proposition for the rebate in stamps to be used in the future upon the manufactured article will relieve this case of all of its friction. The same idea was suggested by my honorable friend from North Carolina.

Mr. RANSOM. May I say a word to my friend from Alabama? I think his amendment in reference to this question is excellent, with this proviso, that it should apply to the manufacturer and not to the dealer, because your dealer would have no use for the stamps with that proviso. It seems to me the Senator from Virginia should have no objection to the amendment of my friend from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to limiting it to manufacturers. I put in "dealers" because I had what I confess to be a rather vague idea that they might be injured in some way, for I did not make the expression very broad. I have no particular care about the precise method of the application of the idea, but I do believe that by the payment of the rebate in stamps, which may be used in the future operations of the manufacturers, we can relieve all the friction in this measure and make it perfectly easy for the Government and for the manufacturers to get along with the subject in the future.

And as to the method of accounting, it seems to me to be simple enough. The manufacturer who has affixed stamps upon the manufactured article, whether a box of tobacco or a box of cigars or a bottle of snuff, can claim at the proper Department and in the proper bureau an allowance of stamps in consideration of the 4 cents per pound reduction that we make upon this manufactured article. That Department, under the following provision of the bill, can easily control the whole subject and make the matter of accounting a matter of inconsiderable importance, I think:

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The party who holds goods upon which he has affixed stamps renders his account. If there is a doubt about it under the regulations the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, he can send his inspector, his agent there, and see whether those stamps are actually affixed on these boxes, and in that way he can ascertain the precise state of the account. There would probably be no loss whatever, no danger of fraud.

When a system of this kind, which it seems is entirely just, can be applied, as I think and believe, with so little of difficulty to this subject, it seems to me that it would be better to adopt this plan. I therefore hope that the Senator from Virginia, with such modifications as he may think best, will adopt this system, that the rebate shall be paid in stamps to be used in the future dealings of the manufacturer with this subject.

It is undeniably true that we take 4 cents a pound of tax actually paid from the men who have been manufacturing unless the extension of time that we give here shall be a sufficient allowance to enable them to work off their stock. I am persuaded, and I am also informed by some persons who are largely engaged in the manufacture of tobacco and snuff, that the extension of time itself is not a remedy. It is precarious, it is uncertain, and it may result in depriving a large number of operatives of their daily bread. While legislating upon a subject of this kind, I should like to aid the men who are engaged in doing the work for the manufacturers.

The Senator from Virginia proposes, in place of my amendment, to add to his own "and such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps at the reduced rate." I am entirely satisfied with that and I will vote for that proposition, and that supersedes the necessity of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] modifies his amendment. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the reduction: Provided, The same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been ascertained or presented within thirty days following the date of the reduction: and such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps at the reduced rate.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask a question about the language there. It must be ascertained within thirty days. How "ascertained?"

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Virginia submitted the proposition, and can of course explain it better than I can.

Mr. MAHONE. Of course the revenue department will inaugurate a system for ascertaining by inventory what is on hand.

Mr. ALLISON. In thirty days ascertaining the difference between 16 and 12 cents with three hundred and eighty-six or four hundred and twenty-five thousand different accounts is practically impossible. I think it can hardly be ascertained within ten years. That is about as short a time as the Commissioner can do it.

Mr. HOAR. Is that in the alternative, "ascertained or presented."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That part of the amendment will be again reported.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Where the claim has not been ascertained or presented within thirty days.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia for one moment to the modification of his amendment. It provides that such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps. The point to which I wish to call his attention is, can there under the existing law be any rebate to a manufacturer? That is to say, does the manufacturer ever put the stamp on a package of manufactured tobacco until he is ready to remove it from the factory? And he never removes it from the factory until he has negotiated the sale.

Mr. MAHONE. The manufacturer frequently puts a large quantity of stamps on the tobacco preparatory to filling an order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If I were not paired, I should vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

Mr. GROOME, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER,] and hence withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON.] Mr. JONES, I am told, would vote in favor of the amendment and Mr. HARRISON against it.

Mr. ALDRICH, (after having voted in the negative.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] I therefore withdraw my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] The Senator from Nebraska desired me to make the statement.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that there may be a recess taken from half past five to half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator to say eight o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well, eight o'clock. I move that the Senate take a recess from half past five to eight o'clock.

Mr. BAYARD. I thought it was distinctly understood that if we came here at eleven we should avoid this thing of a recess. That was the understanding and was the reason given, that if we came here at eleven and sat until six we should avoid coming back at night, when everybody knows that in this weather the Senate will be thin and public business will not be properly attended to.

Mr. INGALLS. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the motion is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HOAR. The motion is out of order.

Mr. INGALLS. No; the motion is in order and is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. You can move to take now a recess to a future time if you choose, but you cannot now move that at a future time the Senate shall take a recess.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I move now that the Senate take a recess from this time until eight o'clock.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. It is not debatable, but I desire to say that I shall be here, and there will be a call of the House, and nothing shall be done without a quorum.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not that debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question and declared that the noes seemed to prevail.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was a response to the roll-call.

Mr. PENDLETON. There was a response?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was a response.

Mr. PENDLETON. The response was made in defiance of my asking the attention of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not ask to debate it; I rose to ask merely that the motion should be stated so that we might understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask that the motion be stated from the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the motion distinctly again. He endeavored to do so before. The motion of the Senator from Vermont is that the Senate now take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. PENDLETON. I understood the motion to be to take it from some subsequent period.

Mr. BECK. Pending that I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll-call has already commenced. The Secretary will proceed with the roll-call.

The Principal Legislative Clerk continued the call of the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

Mr. GROOME, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER,] and hence withhold my vote.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR.]

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am paired for this afternoon with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] I do not know how he would vote upon this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] and have been for some time, he being indisposed. I shall not vote, as I presume he would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I voted "yea" on this question. I am not well and cannot be here to-night, and therefore change my vote to "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,
Allison,	Ferry,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Frye,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Chilcott,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,

NAYS—27.

Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,

Butler,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Camden,	Harris,	Pugh,	Williams.
Coke,	Jackson,	Ransom,

ABSENT—26.

Anthony,	Groome,	Kellogg,	Plumb,

Edmunds,	Hill of Georgia,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck.
Fair,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Garland,	Johnston,	Platt

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the amendment as amended. There is some confliction of opinion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, and cheroots held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the reduction: Provided, The same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been ascertained or presented within thirty days following the date of the reduction; and such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps at the reduced rate.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the amendment of the committee, the text which was amended, struck out the whole clause down to line 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Finance proposed to amend by striking out from line 10, including the word "provided," to the end of the section.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair did not hear me complete my statement. I understand that the committee proposed to strike out from line 10 down to line 19, to the word "effect." The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is in the nature of perfecting that section before it is stricken out; that the Senator from Virginia added at the fifteenth line the amendment; but the question must still be put on striking out the entire section down to line 19 as one independent question. That has made of the committee amendment two amendments and not one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to be a substitute for the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and it is so printed.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the matter from line 15 to line 19, may I inquire of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is stricken out.

Mr. HOAR. When was it stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the yea-and-nay vote just taken.

Mr. HOAR. Did the Senator from Virginia substitute his amendment for those lines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly. The question was so submitted.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Secretary report exactly what the amendment of the Senator from Virginia was and where it came in, whether it was a substitute for anything or not, and if for any thing, what.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the words printed before the text of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It was proposed to insert as a "substitute for so much of section 3 as is proposed to be stricken out by the committee the following."

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that it was put in that form from the desk, but the Chair is clearly right as the Secretary reads. Then, as I understand it, the adoption of this amendment leaves no power in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to adopt rules and regulations for ascertaining the amount of rebate to which any manufacturer or dealer may be entitled.

Mr. RANSOM. That can be added.

Mr. HOAR. That ought to be added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move an amendment?

Mr. MORRILL. I take it there will be no objection to inserting those words.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose before putting the question on the amendment as amended it is in order to add the words beginning "it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue," in the fifteenth line. It is only a part of what was stricken out, not the whole, so that it may be reinserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the amendment of the Senator from Virginia by adding the words which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. HOAR. I think instead of the word "act" I will substitute the word "section;" so as to read, "as may be necessary to carry this section into effect."

Mr. MAHONE. That is better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The Chair hears none. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Committe on Finance report to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. That on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, so much of section 3 of an act approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government," as imposes an additional duty of 25 per cent. on all molasses, tank bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, and on sugars, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, is hereby repealed; and the duties on such articles shall be and remain the same as before the passage of said act. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause proper Dutch standards of sugar to be furnished for use in the collection of duty on sugar, and to declare by regulation the true saccharine strength which shall be equivalent to each number of such standard. And in any case where the strength of the imported sugar is, in proportion to its color, above the proper strength for that color by the Dutch standard, duties shall be charged according to the strength, and not according to the color.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to the proposed section, in accordance with the notice given some days since. I move to strike out all after the word "act," in line 11, in the following words:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause proper Dutch standards of sugar to be furnished for use in the collection of duties on sugar, and to declare by regulation the true saccharine strength which shall be equivalent to each number of such standard. And in any case where the strength of the imported sugar is, in proportion to its color, above the proper strength for that color by the Dutch standard, duties shall be charged according to the strength, and not according to the color.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Maine will yield to me for one moment, I desire to enter a motion to strike out the fourth section entirely and insert what I send to the desk. The amendment of the Senator from Maine will take precedence of my amendment, and will first be acted upon. The amendment that I propose is a slight modification of an amendment of which the Senator from Kentucky gave notice some days ago, and I desire to have it reported now.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that being moved.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Maine of course takes precedence because it is in order to perfect the section before a motion to strike out and insert would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the whole of section 4 and to insert:

That all taxes and customs duties imposed by laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day January, 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the object of my amendment, as is very plain, is to reduce the operation of section 4 to simply leaving the duty upon sugar at what it was before the 25 per cent. additional duty was put on. I desire there to leave it. I do not desire to enter into the discussion and the consideration of all the different tests of sugar. The very object of my amendment is to avoid that discussion and that consideration.

To some Senators it seems very plain that the provision which has been reported from the committee should be put on; to others it is very blind and dark and doubtful. All of those questions I wish to avoid by my amendment. The subject-matter in that part of the section which is struck out by my amendment was before the House of Representatives Congress after Congress. The Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives dealt and wrestled with that question year after year, Congress after Congress, and to-day it is a grave question as to what tests should be applied.

If there is any thing, in my judgment, that should be left to the tariff commission it is such an adjustment as is implied or invoked in the remnant of this section which I seek to leave out. The tariff commission has already assembled; it is now at work; I am told is considering this very subject; and I want to strike this matter from the section and let that commission discuss and deal with the subject.

I move the amendment also in the interest of expedition, for, depend upon it, if we enter into the discussion of all the subject-matters involved in the latter part of this section we prolong this discussion for days.

For all these reasons I desire to limit the section to the plain restoration of the duty upon sugar as it was before the 25 per cent. was put on.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Maine that the tariff commission have gone down to Long Branch for their health and have issued bulletins calling for information upon tariff questions, and I hope he will move that a copy of the RECORD for the last week shall be sent to each of them, which perhaps will enlighten them.

Mr. FRYE. I hope not. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. I presume that the members of the commission are fond of light reading by the seaside, and they cannot get along without the RECORD. I have no doubt that every member of the commission has a copy, and is reading it to the exclusion of English and French novels and everything else commonly read by the seaside.

Mr. FRYE. I would not want to have the speech of the Senator from Kentucky before them either.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest also to send them a record of the Democratic caucus this morning.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer an amendment to this section that would precede the one offered by my colleague, in fact two amendments. I suppose if the pending amendment should be adopted I would not then be precluded from offering amendments to portions of the section before the part that my colleague moves to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator would be in order after action upon the pending amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I am obliged to ask for information from an unaccustomed quarter. I ask the honorable Senator from Vermont, was there a Democratic caucus this morning?

Mr. MORRILL. I heard so.

Mr. BAYARD. I never did.

Mr. GROOME. None of us heard of it.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator knows so much of the Republican caucuses in connection with the tariff that probably he had better send the tariff commission a record of those.

Mr. MORRILL. I find it in the Associated Press report.

Mr. BECK. Was it in the Boston Herald? If it was in the Boston Herald, it is doubtful, I judge, from what has been said about that paper. That is the only paper which has published it, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN Mr. President, with respect to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] section 4 is a repeal of one section of the act of March 3, 1875, (section 3,) which reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That on all molasses, concentrated molasses, tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, and on sugars according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties now imposed in schedule G, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, an amount equal to 25 per cent. of said duties as levied upon the several articles and grades therein designated; Provided, That concentrated melada, or concrete, shall hereafter be classed as sugar dutiable according to color by the Dutch standard; and melada shall be known and defined as an article made in the process of sugar-making, being the cane-juice boiled down to the sugar point and containing all the sugar and molasses resulting from the boiling process and without any process of purging or clarification, and any and all products of the sugar-cane imported in bags, mats, baskets, or any other than tight packages shall be considered sugar and dutiable as such: And provided further, That of the drawback on refined sugars exported allowed by section 3019 of the Revised Statutes of the United States only 1 per cent. of the amount so allowed shall be retained by the United States.

The first clause of section 4 of the pending bill proposes to repeal that section and restores the duties to what they were as stated in the Revised Statutes; in other words, it restores the sugar duties to the same rate of duties which had been fixed for some eight or ten years before, which are set out in the Revised Statutes. That is a simple proposition upon which I do not care to enlarge, at this hour of the evening especially. It is for the Senate to say whether this additional tax, passed as it was declared for the purpose of protecting the sinking fund and to provide for the exigencies of the Government in March 3, 1875, imposing the additional duty of 25 per cent. on sugar, ought to be repealed. Every Senator can answer that for himself.

As to the last clause, that portion of the section proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Maine is intended to restore the law as it was administered by the Treasury Department prior to the decision of the Supreme Court. Until that decision, within the last three or four months, the taxes were collected upon the basis of the saccharine strength of the sugar as tested by the polariscope. I do not intend at this unseasonable hour to go at any length into the necessity of this provision, because I hope that every Senator will recall a previous discussion on this subject and look at it in a dispassionate way and decide it upon the actual merits of the proposition.

The history of the sugar question is pretty well understood already. Some two or three months ago, on the discussion of the tariff-commission bill, I had occasion to state the difficulties that arose out of the collection of the sugar tax. In the course of the manufacture of sugar foreign matters are intermixed with it which reduces the standard of color, making sugars of high saccharine strength and value appear to be of very dark color and greatly less than their real value. Under the law the standard of color was the only standard prescribed by statute, and the darker grades of sugar were taxed at a lower rate. Schedule G of section 2005 of the Revised Statutes fixes the duty on sugar as it was before the passage of the act of March 3, 1875, and as it will be if this section passes now, and is as follows:

SCHEDULE G.—SUGARS.

Sugar not above No. 7 Dutch standard in color: 1¾ cents per pound.

Sugar above No. 7 and not above No. 10 Dutch standard in color: 2 cents per pound.

Sugar above No. 10 and not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color: 2¼ cents per pound.

Sugar above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color: 2¾ cents per pound.

Sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard in color: 3¼ cents per pound.

Sugar above No. 20 Dutch standard in color, and on all refined loaf, lump, crushed, powdered, and granulated sugar: 4 cents per pound. But sirup of sugar, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, or concentrated molasses, entered under the name of molasses, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Sugar-candy, not colored: 10 cents per pound.

All other confectionery, not otherwise provided for, made wholly or in part of sugar, and on sugars after being refined, when tinctured, colored, or in any way adulterated, valued at 30 cents per pound or less: 15 cents per pound.

Confectionery valued above 30 cents per pound, or when sold by the box, package, or otherwise than by the pound: 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Molasses: 5 cents per gallon.

Tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, and concentrated molasses: 1¼ cents per pound.

It thus appears that the tax increased as the color became lighter. The color being the only standard fixed, and the Dutch standard of color being a well known commercial term and phrase which had been adopted in Holland and in all countries as the best standard then known of the relative value of the different grades of sugar, it was adopted in our tariff.

The Dutch standard of color was also a standard of value. The different classes according to the Dutch standard, though evidenced by color, were in fact and intent classes according to value. This is clearly stated in numerous authorities which I have had occasion to consult, one of which, Mr. R. A. Ogilvie, surveyor-general of the British customs, sets forth fully in regard to the color of sugar as a standard of value as follows:

The sugar of the cane is composed of pure sugar and molasses; and as pure sugar is white and molasses is dark, a mixture of the two gives such or such a shade of color according to the proportion in which the molasses predominates. This was the natural state of things; the shade of color was in consequence accepted as accurately indicating the quality, and purchases were regulated accordingly in England, and in France they were made on the same type de bonne quatrieme.

Hon. David A. Wells also gives the history of the Dutch standard as follows, namely:

Dutch standard.—The so-called Dutch standard was first introduced into the American tariff in 1861, through the provision that thereafter sugars should be classified for the purposes of the customs revenue into those not above No. 12 Dutch standard of color and refined sugars; the No. 12 being assumed as representing the dividing line between raw and refined sugars. This standard finds its origin and name in the circumstance that it was adopted many years ago by the Dutch merchants, primarily for the purpose of classifying the various sugar products of the Island of Java, a Dutch East Indian dependency. It is founded on the assumption that color in sugars is the coefficient of purity or saccharine strength; and starting with the very lowest grade of sugar that is found in commerce, one that by reason of the crudeness and imperfection of its manufacture is almost black with impurity, and designating such sugar with a given number as a unit for color, say from 1 to 4, that each additional number represents a corresponding progressive gain in color, and if in color, then also a corresponding gain in saccharine strength or purity. The standards as thus arranged by the Dutch gradually came into extensive use throughout the world for the classification and designation of the sugars of commerce, and in many countries also became the basis for the assessment of customs revenue, specific samples of sugar corresponding to the different numbers, and hermetically sealed in glass bottles, being annually prepared and distributed by the Dutch authorities. All sugars according to the Dutch standard which grade below No. 7 in color are the typical crude sugars, simply purged from molasses, and really constitute the raw material for every further process of manufacture; and every grade of sugar above No. 7 may be regarded as an advanced manufacture, every step forward in which reduces (brightens) the color and increases the cost, through the added expense of labor and capital.

Dr. Kauffman, an eminent European authority, after stating the history of the Dutch standard, says:

The introduction of this method is based on the observation that sugar in a pure state is, in itself, throughout white; on this was founded the theory (annahme) that the degree of coloration, which could only be caused by the intermixed substances or decomposition products of sugar adhering to the sugar, was to be considered as a measure of the lower value of the sugar. At the same time, as a conversion of the crystals to powdered sugar caused the mass to seem less intensely colored than would otherwise be the case, it was sought to perfect the method by testing the sugar as to the sharpness of the grain, which could be felt by rubbing it between the fingers; and finally it was sought to estimate the degree of dampness of the sugar in order to be able to approximately determine or estimate the amount of water contained therein.

The color types, which by this method furnished the principal criterion of the value of the sugar, had originally in the case of colonial sugars a tolerably well-justified importance, which, however, can no longer be ascribed to them, since technical progress has made it easy for the industry to effect the coloration of raw sugars by artificial means without materially altering the value of its yield in pure sugar (refined sugar)—i. e., its refinery yield. It is at present not only possible to prepare raw sugars with a lighter color, which shall show a bright luster even in the last products, without their containing any more pure sugar than the far darker-colored products of other manufactories, but sugars of high percentage are frequently colored dark in order to reduce the tax or duty to which they are liable without causing them to suffer any reduction of refinery yield.

This shows not only the purpose of the Dutch standard, but the dangers to which it is exposed. In fact, after the adoption of it as our standard of value it was evaded and avoided by artificial processes, as by the admixture of foreign substances, so as to darken the sugar and thus reduce the tax.

For a time that substantial fraud was corrected and defeated. The Treasury Department at the time when Mr. Boutwell, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. Bristow were Secretaries held that such artificial coloring was a fraud subjecting the sugars to seizure; and that if it was shown to be artificially colored that it could be taxed according to its true and natural color in the ordinary and usual process of manufacture. That decision of the Department was sustained by the courts in every instance, first in a case in California, and then I believe in many other cases.

Finally, however, a new process of manufacturing was discovered, a centrifugal process, by which the coloring matter was introduced in the process of manufacture and before it assumed the form of commercial sugar. It was introduced by a process of manufacture, and not by an admixture of foreign articles. The sugar was darkened by burnt molasses and other processes of manufacture, which operated in the same way to defraud the revenue as the previous actual admixture of foreign substances did. Then it was that the Treasury Department, in meeting this new difficulty, issued the following order:

All sugars containing 90 per cent., and not more than 94 per cent., of crystallizable sugar, the apparent color of which is not above No. 7 Dutch standard in color, shall be classified as above No. 7 and not above No. 10 Dutch standard in color. All sugars containing more than 94 per cent. of crystallizable sugar, the apparent color of which is not above No. 10 Dutch standard in color, shall be classified as above No. 10 and not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color.

This order applied to the sugar what is called the polariscope test, an ingenious device, by which the actual saccharine strength of the sugar was determined and ascertained.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator describe that process so that the country may know just what the polariscope is?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think I could, any more than I could describe the process of a thermometer, although I have seen it applied.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask at this point, has it not been proved by experience that with all that is claimed for the polariscopic test it is fallacious and misleading, and that the same test applied at different times by different individuals produces a different result? Is it not therefore a doubtful thing in the minds of many men as to its being a complete, fixed, and perfect test?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer the question of the Senator from Maine, but I hope no other question will be put to me for a few moments until I can make a statement.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator proceeds to answer it, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] the other day stated, as I understood, that goods brought into the custom-houses by the polariscopic test were not sold upon that test to buyers, that the merchants were not willing to adopt it. I have no knowledge of the subject, but I refer to the remarks made on that subject the other day by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer these two questions, and I hope that they will be all that I will have to answer until I get through.

In answer to the Senator from Maine, I say that the polariscopic test is acknowledged to be the best now known among all dealers in sugar, refiners, manufacturers, and importers in every country in the world, and I have the authority here to prove it. I have further to say that when it was applied by the custom-house department for two or three years while the Treasury order remained in force, there was but little dispute or controversy about the accuracy of that test or its truth and reliability. There never was a litigation or controversy about the accuracy of the test of the polariscope.

As I have already shown, sugar in its natural state is pure white. When an admixture is made, as by molasses and other things, most of it molasses, it becomes darker and darker, reducing its grade and value until it is a dark mass of apparent dirt. As it is advanced in color and purified from these foreign substances it becomes lighter in grade until the pure sugar of chemistry is entirely white. The Dutch standard was founded upon that fact. It was adopted in Holland, making twenty different grades of sugar, from the most impure of all sugars up to the highest standard, No. 20, in different grades, and those grades of sugar according to color measured also the saccharine strength and value of sugar, and they did not vary to any considerable degree, but became the acknowledged standard of the value of sugar in every market.

But, sir, by the devices and discoveries I have stated the colors of the Dutch standard have been blackened, so that the apparent color is no longer the test of value but rather the degree of fraud. It is to test the extent of this fraud that the polariscope is applied. It was done after Congress had been fully informed of the purpose of the Department and with its tacit advice and consent.

Every commercial nation has met the evasion of the Dutch standard by new tests of saccharine strength.

The regulations adopted by the Kingdom of the Netherlands are stated by the Minister of Finance as follows:

> The law of May 25, 1880, has by no means for its object the general substitution of saccharometric methods for the color standard in the classification of raw sugars. The changes which it is intended to introduce in the existing conditions relate solely to sugars that have been purposely colored, or whose general characteristics lead to the presumption of a higher degree of richness than that of the highest number of the class to which it would according to the color standard belong. In these two special cases the contents in sugar shall be determined by the method of polarizing after washing out, as described in the royal edict of September 25, and these sugars shall be classified according to the relation that the contents in sugar so found bears to the scale based on the investigation conducted in a similar manner of Java sugars of the numbers 15, 10, and 7, (that is to say, of a number above the highest of each class.)

The course of the French Government is indicated by the statement of Mr. Peligot, French minister of agriculture and commerce:

> In brief, Mr. Peligot declared that as an indication of saccharine richness of a sugar he would give the preference to the shade of color, that is to say, to the types (color standard tr.) over saccharometry and chemical analysis, always on the condition that the types be suitably prepared and renewed whenever necessary. It is necessary to reserve the right to have recourse to saccharometry in certain cases as a means of verification. In practice for the government the shade of color gives results as exact as possible.

There is another thing and a far more important commercial fact. Every man who buys sugar to-day in New York or in Cuba, in Holland or in France, buys by the polariscopic test, or some other test of saccharine strength than the color test. I give you a recent quotation from the Havana markets:

> Sugar: Market active; holders firm; molasses sugar, 86° to 89° polarization, 6⅞ to 7 reals gold per arrobe; Muscovado, common to fair, 6⅞ to 7⅛ reals; centrifugal, 92° to 96° polarization, in boxes and hhds., 8½ to 9⅜ reals gold per arrobe. Stock in warehouse at Havana and Matanzas 88,600 boxes, 131,400 bags, and 136,100 hhds.; receipts during the week 1,700 boxes, 600 bags, and 1,900 hhds.; exports during the week 4,850 boxes, 60 bags, and 4,900 hhds., all the bags and hhds. to the United States. Spanish gold, 169¼. Exchange firm; on the United States, 60 days, gold, 8 to 8⅛ premium; on the United States, short sight, 8¾ to 9¼ premium; on London, 19¼ to 19⅜ premium; on Paris, 5⅛ to 5¼ premium.

The refiners who oppose this bill and who received enormous bounty in the shape of drawbacks from the Treasury, actual bounty before the polariscope order took effect, as I shall show hereafter, those very refiners test their sugar when they buy it in or when they sell it by the polariscope.

Let me go back to the Treasury order. When issued it was applied for two years, and the revenue of the Government upon sugar increased at the rate of about $2,000,000 a year as the result of this test. Before that test had been applied nearly all the sugar was imported as under No. 7 Dutch standard. After that order was issued the average grade of sugar rose to No. 10 Dutch standard. The difference in duty between these two grades is about one-third of a cent per pound. Up to the issuing of that order two-thirds or three-fourths of the sugar was introduced at the lowest grade. After the application of that order the average grade was No. 10 Dutch standard, and that new test of the standards of sugar increased the revenue by ascertaining its saccharine strength.

That continued for more than two years until by the decision of the Supreme Court it was held that the Treasury order which applied the polariscopic test was not within the power of the Treasury Department. The majority of the court held that a manufacturer might, in the process of the manufacture of sugar, change its color by the means stated. Such process was conceded to be an evasion of the law, but that Congress alone had the power to correct that evasion by adopting other tests.

And now, sir, the sum and substance of this proposition is to enable the Treasury Department to apply the polariscope or any other test to ascertain the saccharine strength of sugar in levying duties upon it, just such tests as are applied by every merchant, refiner, importer, or dealer in sugar to ascertain its value when he buys or sells. Upon this plain proposition it would seem to me to be conclusive that the tests adopted by the Treasury should be authorized by law in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court and should be continued by the Department until the commission shall propose new grades, or guards against evasion and fraud.

It may be, and I trust it will be, that when the commission come to revise this whole subject they will provide grades of sugar and probably avoid these difficult questions which have arisen in the construction of the Dutch standard. Our action will not at all conclude them, but it will simply enable the Treasury Department in the mean time, until the report is acted upon, to apply tests that will prevent an actual practical fraud upon the Treasury.

I might amplify this debate; I might read the decision of the Supreme Court. I might show from quotations in the daily prints that all dealers deal upon the basis of the polariscopic test. I might show you more fully than I have done that the Dutch themselves and other commercial nations have adopted this very system, and by it have ascertained the strength of sugar; but it is not necessary.

Under existing law all sugar exported is entitled to a drawback of all duties paid upon the raw sugar imported, but the amount of the drawback can only be ascertained by the condition of sugar when exported. The effect of the operation of the decision of the Supreme Court will be that when we come to give a refund for sugars exported from this country we pay in effect by the polariscope test, while we collect duties by the Dutch standard, applied to sugars artificially reduced in color, and thus are cheated and defrauded in revenue. Yet when refineries take that black sugar and clean it from the discoloring matter and it is exported we pay them the drawback based upon the estimated quantity of raw sugar required to produce the sugar exported. We pay the drawback by the polariscope test; we import by the false Dutch standard; and thus necessarily pay more in drawbacks than we receive as duties on that sugar. We paid as drawback in the year ending November 30, 1878, $2,330,083; in 1879, $3,365,297. After the Treasury order issued, the payment on drawback fell in the year 1880 to $913,660; and in 1881, to $758,048.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that since the decision of the Supreme Court we are paying the refiners who are converting at the rate of some 75,000,000 pounds of sugar from its raw state, brought into this country and discolored, and when they refine and export that same sugar we pay a higher sum for drawback than we actually collected as duty on the raw sugar.

I have a recent report, made by an officer of the Treasury Department, in which the difficulties which grew out of this subject are very clearly stated by one of the ablest officers of the Department, Mr. Chamberlain. I read a single paragraph:

> In practice, we find that a very high grade of raw sugar, (centrifugals,) costing the highest market price, equal to clayed sugars, from No. 16 to No. 18 Dutch standard, is received into a refinery, and the duty assessed at its color valuation, indicating an estimated out-turn of refined loaf, cut-loaf, crushed, granulated, or powdered sugar of less than 69 per cent. of the raw material, and paying a duty accordingly of 2.18¾ cents per pound. If, however, as the fact really is, that this sugar, so refined, not only produces an out-turn of 68 pounds of pure loaf sugar, but 22 pounds additional of the same sugar, making a total of 90 pounds out-turn, it will at once be seen that this refiner, when he has exported 68 pounds, and received his drawback of 3.18 cents per pound thereupon, which is equal to the amount of duty paid on the raw material, has still on hand 22 pounds, which have in reality paid no duty, because the whole amount of duty on the original raw sugar imported has been returned to him in the drawback received upon the hard sugar exported.

Perhaps I can illustrate it by taking an invoice of sugar which is brought into this country. It may be of saccharine strength and saccharine value of No. 12 Dutch standard. If it was of that strength it would pay a duty of 2$\frac{1}{16}$ cents a pound, but if by this process of discoloring it would be reduced to No. 7 Dutch standard of color, it only pays $2\frac{5}{16}$ cents a pound. Thus by this process, which the Supreme Court hold is not a fraud, it does operate to deprive the Government of $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent on every pound of sugar thus discolored. Suppose that sugar is put into a refinery. It is there by a simple process expurgated from the discoloring matter, from the molasses, from the dirt and other things that are introduced into it, and it is raised to No. 20 Dutch standard of color. When that sugar, which is only cleaned of its dirt you may say, is exported, drawback taxes are paid back to the refiner, who perhaps is also the importer, at the rate of 3.18 cents a pound, or about one cent more than the tax which has been paid to the Government.

But it is said it is in the power of the Treasury Department to change the drawback. It is true the law authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to fix from time to time by regulations the drawbacks that shall be paid upon sugar; but how is that done? It is only by estimating the duty that the refined sugar would pay if imported and pay this sum as a drawback. Therefore, when the sugar is examined by the custom-house officer for exportation, he takes its apparent color as his guide in fixing the drawback, but its apparent color is then its real color. It then shows what it is. That sugar may be a pure sugar of No. 20 Dutch standard or refined sugar, but when imported it may have paid duties only as No. 7 Dutch standard, but with saccharine strength and intrinsic value of No. 14 Dutch standard. The officer of the custom-house cannot track the sugar from the dock through the refinery to ascertain what duties were, but must judge from the sugar when ready for exportation in fixing the drawback. He is bound then to say that it is entitled to a drawback of about 3.18 cents a pound.

You may say here is a fraud, and that the Secretary of the Treasury may change it and reduce the amount of drawback. He can only test it by the Dutch standard of color. This would make the Dutch standard of color prevail both in the importation and the exportation, but when the article is imported it is reduced by the discoloring process down to the lowest grade possible; when it is exported it is exported in the highest grade possible, and thus it is unavoidable from the very nature of the transaction to prevent a large amount from being now paid from the Treasury of the United States to the refiner for exporting the sugar more than was paid by him when the sugar was admitted into the country and carried to the refinery.

What is the object of bringing sugar here to be refined? It is only to give employment to our people. What is just to the refiner? Simply to return him what he paid to the Government as taxes when he exports it, and no more.

We do not propose to give a bounty to a refiner for refining sugar. We only propose to give him an amount equal to the amount of tax he paid; but by this change in the standard of value, by this change in the mode of testing that standard, the Government is actually defrauded, and is compelled to pay a larger amount to the refiner. I firmly believe that upon the sugar refined in 1879 the Government refunded as a drawback one million dollars more than it collected as taxes on the raw sugars from which the exported sugars were made.

Therefore it is that three years ago, in the year ending June 30, 1879, 116,862,583 pounds of sugar were brought to this country for refining and soon after exported, and upon exportation the United States paid as drawback $3,365,297. This was before the Treasury order was issued. No such sum was paid on the importation of this sugar. By this device, amounting to a fraud upon the Government, we have collected duty on this sugar at a less rate, and thus have lost a sum so large that I do not care scarcely to name it. We have paid large sums back to these refiners for refining sugars for the foreign market in excess of the amount they paid to us in duty.

Unless you change either at one end of the line or at the other the Treasury Department is entirely powerless. Unless you give the Secretary of the Treasury the same means of testing the saccharine strength of the sugar when it is imported as you do when it is exported you leave the Treasury officers hamstrung and disabled from doing their duty.

I have no feeling or interest in this matter, except as I was called upon to execute the law, and I deemed it my duty to execute it so as to do justice and right, and not to allow any one, whether they were rich corporations of refiners scattered through the country, to as I thought defraud the Government and evade the tax. That is the operation of the existing law, and the Treasury Department is utterly powerless.

The officers of the Treasury Department since the decision of the Supreme Court have been trying to find a way of ascertaining what drawback should be paid out. It is admitted that too large a sum is paid and must necessarily be paid under the present system.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator what is the date of that decision?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have it here. It is a matter of history.

Mr. HALE. About what time?

Mr. SHERMAN. About two or three months ago.

Mr. HALE. A little more than that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think this spring. When that decision was made, as a matter of course the Department at once conformed to it, and they are now collecting duty on all the immense bulk of sugar which comes into this country by the apparent color, not by the real strength. They are compelled to do that in pursuance of what is admitted to be and declared to be a plain evasion for the purpose of defrauding.

Senators who heard me when I read the decision of the Supreme Court will remember that it was there said by the Supreme Court that it was admitted on the trial of the case that this process was adopted to evade the duty, to reduce the grade, and when evidence was offered that that was the avowed purpose, when men were sent there to show the process and had it demonstrated before the jury and showed how it was done and why it was done, the Supreme Court held that as this was a discoloration before the sugar was completed they had the right to do it, because the law fixed only one standard, and that was the Dutch standard; that the Department and the courts could not present another standard; it was for Congress only to provide another standard.

After that decision was rendered, at once the attempt was made to correct this drawback. The innumerable difficulties are stated in these documents. Some four or five years ago the grades of drawback were made to conform to the grades of duty upon the importations. If you have a right to test the saccharine strength when the goods come in and when they go out, then you have a test; but under the present mode the Department alone may collect the duty upon the apparent color reduced by burnt molasses and caramel, and when the goods go out you pay out the bounty, the drawback, upon the real color, you make an advance in some cases of three-fourths of a cent to one cent a pound. When you consider that that applies to over 100,000,000 pounds which were imported in one year, it is a large sum.

The first effect of the order issued by the Treasury Department in 1879 was to prevent bringing in sugar here by a false standard and exporting it by a larger standard. It reduced the amount of importations very largely. It did give to the Government the rate of the duty according to its saccharine strength, and did prevent us from paying out of the Treasury a drawback in excess of the duties paid by the importers.

But now the Department is utterly unable to guard itself or to guard the Treasury, and its skillful officers cannot devise a rule. Now that according to the decision of the Supreme Court they are compelled to take an apparent color as the standard of value they can only take it, and when the goods are exported they can only take the new, then become the real sugar, and pay the drawback upon that. Yet the amount of labor in some cases applied to that sugar in bringing about this strange metamorphosis will sometimes not cost as much as the increased drawback which is given to them by the operation.

This is a fraud upon the Government. It is a fraud upon the producers of sugar in Louisiana. It tends to demoralize the trade, it tends to throw the whole amount of this great business in a few hands, and to give them the advantage. It breaks down all the smaller refineries and builds up all the large ones. It has all the elements and the worst elements of a monopoly.

Sir, it is nothing to me further than my attention was called to it as I was called upon to administer the law. I have no regrets at the mode in which it was administered, although it seems from the decision of the Supreme Court that the Department went beyond its legal powers to do what was right. I think on the whole the judgment of Judge Matthews is altogether the wiser statement of the law. Certainly it was as we understood the law to be, but I do not want to read those extracts again.

I say for us now to reduce the duty on sugar and not enable the Department to ascertain the saccharine strength of the sugar by some test would be an injustice to the Government and an injustice to the people.

If the Senator from Maine wants to discuss with me the merits of the polariscope, there is not a word said in the amendment about the polariscope. It leaves the Treasury Department to find out the best possible test. I say the polariscope is the true test so far as it is now known.

The Senator from Delaware said the other day that officers might with this test defraud the Government, and after all it would depend upon the judgment of the officers, their accuracy and their skill. No great skill is required to make this test, but their accuracy and their honesty must be relied upon. It does not require as much accuracy as the testing of color by the Dutch standard. The saccharine strength of sugar can almost be accurately stated by the polariscope; but suppose it cannot be—this bill does not confine the Department to the polariscope; it requires the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish standards of color according to the Dutch standard, and to test the sugars brought in not only by the color shown by its standard but by the saccharine strength of the sugar.

The best known device is that of the polariscope. Perhaps some other may be discovered. The Secretary of the Treasury is at liberty to adopt either. The passage of this section does not injure anybody; it only prevents a fraud.

I have said all I care to say about this matter, although I have here and could amplify the action of the different countries to show what laws the wise Dutchmen have made upon this subject. I have also the action of France and of England. I have also here the decision of the Supreme Court and many other documents upon which

I could amplify and show to the Senate as clear a case as ever was made, and that it is the imperative duty, according to the language of the Supreme Court, for Congress, with its supreme power over this subject in imposing duties, to come in and fix the standard of saccharine strength. It is a duty that ought not to have been neglected even this long. If we allow it to go over until the next session we will do nobody any good, except to enable refiners to import by one standard and export by another.

Mr. HALE. To show that there was not such complete and universal acquiescence in the polariscopic test as the Senator from Ohio believes, I ask to have a letter, which the Senator from Delaware has just handed to me, read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The letter will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, July 17, 1882.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, brokers in raw or imported sugars in the city of New York, having seen some statements reported to have been made by Senator SHERMAN during your speech on the tariff on the 14th inst. which are incorrect and misleading, desire to inform you of the facts in the premises. Mr. SHERMAN is reported to have said that the polariscope tests of the Government under his orders while Secretary of the Treasury were unchallenged, or words to this effect, and that such tests were made a basis for transactions between merchants. As to the first point, we assert that re-samples and re-tests were demanded by the merchants in a large percentage of the cargoes coming under the edict of the Treasury Department, and very frequently so manifestly incorrect that a third and sometimes a fourth test was demanded. These were, however, generally refused, and the merchant compelled to accept the figures of the Government. It is only proper to say, in addition, that the number of these tests to which objection was made is no criterion as to their general correctness, inasmuch as very many merchants took no pains to protest, believing the United States courts would ultimately refund to the importers the full amount imposed under the polariscope orders. In regard to the second statement we have only to say we have never known an instance in the port of New York where the Government tests were accepted as a basis of sales. We are

Yours, very respectfully,

SKIDDY, MINFORD & CO.,
BOWERMAN BROTHERS,
EDEY, FURNACE & CO.,
BRODICK, FRISBIE & CO.,
STANNARD & TRIBOUT,
GEO. H. TOBIAS.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt that the Senator from Ohio honestly and profoundly believes in this one distinctive test over all others and is desirous that it should be adopted; but the letter which has just been read, which might be duplicated and triplicated, and for that matter be reproduced here in hundreds of cases, as I am informed, shows that so far from its having been accepted or having been made the test and medium for sales, the contrary was largely the fact.

What I object to is that with so doubtful a matter upon this section, which is simply the restoring of the old rate upon sugar, any attempt should be made now to introduce this question of the test. It can do no great harm if the Treasury is left as it is now until a tribunal which has ample time to consider this and other tests can report to Congress, and then we can act more intelligently; perhaps not the Senator from Ohio, but certainly the rest of us.

It is for that reason in the main that I have offered the amendment, and I insist upon it that no harm will come if we simply reduce the duty on sugar and put it back, leaving this subject to be considered where it can be much more deliberately than it can now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will simply say that the section does not fix the polariscope as a test, but leaves it to the Treasury Department. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to say what harm there is in allowing the matter to continue, as it did for two years, when it is admitted that no fraud occurred. What is the objection to allowing them to apply the best test they can until the commission may furnish a better one? That is the only answer I need make.

Mr. HALE. The whole argument of the Senator proceeded upon the theory based upon his late administration in the Treasury Department, and not as to the immediate necessity of a test, saying this test would be applied. I do not want to put the Treasury Department to that test in this hurried way.

Mr. FRYE. In connection with the remarks my colleague has made I want to call attention to one statement of the Senator from Ohio. He said that the polariscope was the test used by the merchants the world over. I desire to say, and to say it emphatically, that there never was a cargo of sugar sold by one merchant to another merchant in the United States where the polariscope of the one merchant determined the saccharine strength of that cargo of sugar. There cannot be an instance found where a merchant used the polariscope for that purpose. True, one merchant who is the seller uses his polariscope, and the other merchant who is the buyer uses his polariscope. The testimony before our committee was that there was not one instance in a hundred where they agreed, and that then they compromised between the two polariscopes.

The Senator says that the Government was not questioned. The Government was absolute, arbitrary, could do its own business in its own way, and the merchant and refiner had no chance on earth with it. Whatever that polariscope of the Government said in the hands of an honest man or in the hands of a dishonest man—as the Senator himself in his report said always in the hands of a low-paid man, whether honest or dishonest—the man who was a refiner had to comply with or suffer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just a word more.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the floor for a moment. The statement made by the Senator from Maine shows that neither of these merchants relied upon a color test; they both took the polariscope. They did exactly as merchants with a yard-stick—every man has his own yard-stick and will not rely upon the yard-stick of the seller, but the buyer always uses his own stick and tests it. After all, the polariscope was the test.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting the question the Chair will present a House bill for reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 6723) to repeal all laws which require the inspection and measurement of wood brought to the city of Washington for sale was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we shall take the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Maine before we adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GROOME, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON'S name was called.) I wish to say that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.] He was paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] and I was paired with the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Virginia both being absent the pair has been transferred, so that both the Senator from Wisconsin and myself can vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish it may be recorded that my colleague [Mr. PLATT] has been paired during the day with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 19; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 24, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to correct the RECORD. On Saturday last, when the bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sailing vessels for foreign account was before the House, and a vote was taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] I announced that I was paired with Mr. DAWES, of Ohio. Although I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, yet I did not exercise that right and announced I would have voted "ay" on the amendment if he were present. That fact does not appear in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WAIT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill for consideration which I am sure will give rise to no debate.

Mr. O'NEILL. And I give notice that I will follow that by asking unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will not take one minute to pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] asks unanimous consent to take from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for present consideration, a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the proceeding under the special rule.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a privileged matter.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understand the Chair to state the regular order will be the call of committees under the new rule. The new rule, it is true, provides that immediately after the approval of the Journal the committees will be called. But Rule XXIV provides that on Mondays, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the States will be called for the introduction of bills, &c. My inquiry is, does the latest rule override the other?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the special rule overrides the standing rule in that respect.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the House will override the new rule, so that we may get the pending bill out of the way.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion when the bill (H. R. No. 3902) went over as unfinished business was the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to amend the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania now moves to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LAND GRANTS TO NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. KNOTT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. KNOTT. My colleague on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. PAYSON,] desires to present certain views of the minority which the House authorized us to present at any time. I rise for the purpose of asking that these views may now be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is recognized.

Mr. PAYSON. I submit a report of a minority of the Committee on the Judiciary in connection with House bill No. 6390 and to accompany House report No. 1284.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee, as the Chair recollects, was laid on the table and ordered to be printed. This will also be ordered to be printed.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer some additional views on the part of myself and several of my colleagues on the committee which I now present, accompanied by a joint resolution, which I ask shall be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. KNOTT. I hope there will be no objection to this joint resolution going upon the Calendar, although we may not have any action upon it during this session.

Mr. ALDRICH. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, this is not a report, but is simply the views of the minority of the committee. It can then only be printed and take the same course as the report.

Mr. KNOTT. I wish to ask if that report should not be upon the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter the Chair did not direct. The House directed it to be sent to the table by unanimous consent and that is now disposed of. What the gentlemen from Illinois and from Kentucky now present are the views of the minority.

Mr. KNOTT. Accompanied with a joint resolution which I think this House would like to consider and discuss. I therefore ask it shall have the opportunity to do so, and that it may go upon the Calendar for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the joint resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution may be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That all the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, under an act of Congress entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, which had not been patented to said company on the 1st day of July, 1882, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited to the United States by reason of a breach of the conditions upon which said grant was made, and that said lands are hereby restored to the public domain and made subject to sale and settlement under existing law.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the report will be printed.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution go upon the Calendar with the report of the committee.

Mr. CASWELL. I object to that.

Mr. KNOTT. Who objects? Let us have the name on record of the gentleman who objects to considering this proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Who objects?

Mr. CASWELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about the practice as to the views of the minority. It has been the custom to receive them and print them with the report of the majority.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My point of order is this: that it is the right of the committee or a member of the committee to move that this joint resolution be placed on the Calendar; and I make that motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. In reference to that point of order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair can hear only one gentleman at a time on a point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. And there is only one speaking when I am up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I submit the motion that this joint resolution be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CASWELL. And I make the point that that motion is not in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will withdraw the motion, and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] to make it.

Mr. KNOTT. I make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to have the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] state any rule which authorizes the views of the minority of a committee to go upon the Calendar as a report; that is entirely a new practice.

Mr. KNOTT. There are certain facts in this case——

Mr. CASWELL. I object to the discussion of this question; there are facts on the other side also.

Mr. KNOTT. There were sundry bills referred to the Committee on the Judiciary touching these land grants. That committee made a report to the House in which it recommends no action at all. A minority of the committee, seven out of fifteen members, dissent from the legal views of the majority and present certain facts showing the necessity of action by this Congress.

The question now comes up, when the committee has made a report to the House, whether the House is in such condition that it cannot consider that report, or consider any counter proposition that may be made by the minority of the committee. In a word, can a committee of this House by giving its report a peculiar shape preclude the possibility of the House considering the subject at all?

The minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, dissenting from the views of the majority, which recommend simply total non-action, present a substantive proposition for the action of the House. Now, I think it is due to the House, I think it is due to the people of this country, who are interested equally with this railroad company in this land grant, that this House should have an opportunity to consider the question and to dispose of it, and that it should not be precluded at all by any peculiarity in the report of the majority of the committee.

It does seem to me to be due to the members of this House that the question of this grant should go upon this Calendar, to be reached and discussed in order as other propositions there pending.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask the Clerk to read the last paragraph on page 305 of the Manual. I am willing to be governed strictly by the rule.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A minority of a committee cannot make a report. It has been the practice for many years to permit the minority of a committee (even of one member) to present their "views," which are appended to the report of the committee; but unanimous consent is required for this purpose. And in cases where an amendment or substitute is recommended by such minority for the bill or resolution reported, it has no parliamentary status until submitted in due form in the House when the subject is under consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to submit this in support of my motion. However, I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] if he desires to be heard.

Mr. COX, of New York. One word as to the rule which has been read, and which I was about myself to have read, if it be a rule. When adverse reports are made we have a right to have them placed upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. When they are reports.

Mr. COX, of New York. In this case I understand that the House, by unanimous consent, gave to the minority of this committee the privilege of making a report.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand that the views of the minority——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] objected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman objected to the joint resolution being placed on the Calendar; not to the reception of the report.

Mr. COX, of New York. When the report of the majority of the committee came in gentlemen asked the privilege to bring in a minority report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And it was granted at that time.

Mr. COX, of New York. Which was then granted.

Mr. POUND. The privilege was granted to bring in the views of the minority, not a report.

Mr. COX, of New York. In ordinary parlance it is a report. Now, if the record shows that consent has been heretofore given for a minority report, or that the views of the minority might be brought in, then why should not a joint resolution appended to that minority report be brought in with it, and, in the absence of any affirmative action on the part of the majority, why may it not be placed on the Calendar like an adverse report, if you please? The rule which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] had read says:

> And in cases where an amendment or substitute is recommended by such minority for the bill or resolution reported, it has no parliamentary status until submitted in due form in the House when the subject is under consideration.

In this case there is no affirmative proposition, no bill, nothing reported here for the action of the House on the part of the majority of the committee. And the only thing on which the House can get any action on this most momentous question is the joint resolution accompanying the views of the minority of the committee.

Unless on this question, of all questions, as I claim, the most important in this Congress to-day, the forfeiture of these Pacific Railroad grants back to the Government—unless we can get a vote on that question, our committees are enabled to close all action by the House of Representatives by their manner of presenting reports. This is the only possible form, without a conflict with the rule read at the instance of my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL,] in which the House can give any expression of its will on this momentous question. Therefore I wish my friend from Illinois, if possible, to press his point of order up to the point, if you please, to an appeal from the decision of the Chair, so that we may have some expression on this matter of land grants at this Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In support of the motion I make I desire to say that there is in this Congress no question of greater importance than the one now presented.

Mr. POUND. I rise to a point of order. I desire that the point of order shall be adhered to strictly in this discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can only be heard upon the question of reference and printing.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] will possess his soul in patience for a few moments he will find that I am proceeding to discuss alone the point of order; but I regard it as not improper to make the remark that a resolution involving indirectly over 100,000,000 acres of land belonging to the Government is a proper subject for discussion and most careful investigation of the authorities on this point.

I have given some thought and attention to this question; and I am fully convinced in my own mind that it is in order and highly proper that the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky should be entertained. The report brought in here is in accordance with authority granted by this House on the 7th of June. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] who presented the report of the majority, reserved to the minority the right to present their views; and out of abundant caution, at a subsequent time on the same day, I asked that leave be granted to the minority to bring in their report. I have before me the RECORD, which shows my statement to be correct.

The minority report is now properly before the House under the leave granted on the 7th of June. This report is accompanied with a motion. When the majority of a committee bring in a report accompanied with a bill it is necessary that a motion shall be submitted to the House to place that bill on the Calendar; and it has always been the practice of the House when a minority bring in a report accompanied by a bill to allow a motion to be made to put it on the Calendar. The gentleman from Kentucky proposes to do nothing more than is done every day when reports accompanied by bills or resolutions are received; that is, to present a report and move that it be printed, and, with accompanying bill or resolution, placed on the Calendar. The gentleman from Kentucky having the floor under the previous leave of the House, accompanies the minority report with a motion and submits it to the House. I have before me Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, in which it is stated that—

> According to a practice begun in Congress about thirty years ago, and now prevailing in all our legislative assemblies, though it is not known to the parliamentary law of Great Britain, the views of those members of a committee who do not concur in the report are allowed to be presented to the House to which the committee belongs.

Further, the same author says:

> They are received by the courtesy of the House, expressed by the ordinary vote of a majority.

Now, that is all we ask for in this case. The gentleman from Kentucky, has availed himself of the privilege of bringing in his report, and moves that the joint resolution which the minority recommend to the House shall be placed on the Calendar. Under the principle laid down in Cushing, this is a question for the majority of the House to decide, not for the Speaker to determine on a point of order. All I insist upon is that it is perfectly competent and proper that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky should be entertained and submitted to the House.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, without discussing the importance of this question, which is certainly important, let us pay attention strictly to the condition of things under the rule. Some time since, when the majority of this committee made their report, they reserved as was the custom the right to the minority to present their views. That was granted by unanimous consent. In pursuance of the unanimous consent then granted, the views of the minority have this morning been presented; but that unanimous consent only went to the presentation of the views. Such presentation only is now in order as a privileged question under the unanimous consent. The views of the minority have been presented. But the gentleman presenting them under that unanimous consent undertakes to supplement the presentation by a new motion, which is that a resolution which he offers and which has no parliamentary status shall now go upon the Calendar. There has been no unanimous consent given for that. It is not only contrary to precedent, but the objection of a single member defeats it, as it is not a privileged motion. The objection has been made; and in my opinion there is nothing before the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether he is informed of the fact that unanimous consent has already been given to make this minority report?

Mr. ROBESON. Undoubtedly; and it has been done. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in pursuance of the consent which has been granted. He asks another thing, that the resolution which he attaches to the views of the minority may be placed on the Calendar to be called up for action. He thus proposes to give to that resolution a parliamentary status which it has not and cannot have without unanimous consent. Unanimous consent is denied, and that is the end of it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let me finish my question to the gentleman. If the matter is brought up here by a minority report submitted to this House, the gentleman from Kentucky being on the floor in charge of that minority report, and the business of that committee being completed and before the House, why has not the gentleman from Kentucky the right to make a motion to dispose of the bill of the minority?

Mr. ROBESON. Because the gentleman from Kentucky is on the floor now on a privileged question only by virtue of a unanimous consent previously given.

Mr. COX, of New York. Cannot he make a motion to refer?

Mr. ROBESON. The unanimous consent was only extended to his making a report of the views of the minority.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Answer me a question.

Mr. ROBESON. I cannot add to my friend's knowledge.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That I do not expect.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well; what is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to inquire if the majority of this committee in making this report had embodied a joint resolution which it wanted to pass, whether the objection could have been made to letting that joint resolution be placed on the Calendar for future action? Most certainly not. Then, if objection could not be made to a joint resolution offered by the majority of the committee——

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Could an objection be made to its being put on the Calendar?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. It would go there as a matter of right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Is there any such thing as a minority report?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am speaking in my own time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from New York rose to ask me a question, and then before I had answered his question undertakes to make a speech in my time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no!

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not yield until I answer the question which the gentleman has submitted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the majority of the committee embodied a joint resolution in their report it would have been the right of that majority to have moved to put it on the Calendar.

It would not go there of its own weight, but it would go there on a motion; and when the House extended to the minority of that committee equally with the majority to submit their views this House gave to that minority also the right in that regard with the majority to submit a bill or joint resolution as the result or expression of those views. It is a right the minority has this moment to move the reference of this joint resolution to the Calendar, and I know of no reason which can be assigned in support of a so-called point of order unless it be to gag this House from an expression of its views on the subject of these land grants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to know what becomes of the constantly reiterated protests on that side against allowing the majority of this House to vote and legislate as it pleases. Here is a proposition simply to allow the majority to express its views in reference to these land grants——

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against the gentleman from Kentucky that he must confine his remarks to the point of order under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am confining my remarks to the point of order, and the point of order is this: if a majority of that committee had closed their report with a joint resolution no man on this floor will deny, not even the Speaker of this House, they had a right to move its reference to the Calendar. When this House by unanimous consent conferred the privilege in the matter of a report on the minority of a committee it conferred equal privilege in the matter of reporting a bill or joint resolution, and the minority have a perfect right now to make the motion which my colleague has made, and I know no rule and I know of no dictum in any author on parliamentary law which will warrant its exclusion.

Mr. CASWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the question.

Mr. CASWELL. I wish to say there is only one report known to the rules, and that is the majority report. The minority may, by consent, present their views, but those views must follow the majority report. If they have accompanied those views with a joint resolution it is simply in explanation of those views. It is not a joint resolution as would be a joint resolution coming from a majority, but it is only a part of the views of the minority and must follow the majority report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Only one point further. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, the point I make is this, and I wish the Speaker to keep that in mind, that it is competent for the gentleman from Kentucky under the circumstances to present his motion, and it is the duty of the Speaker to submit that motion to the House, and it is in the power of the House to determine by a majority of the vote whether the resolution shall go to the Calendar or not.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let me say a word. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when the House gave unanimous consent that this report might be brought in it was simply on the ground that, the report not being ready to accompany the majority report, the courtesy was extended to the minority to file their views. If the position taken by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] be true, then the minority of every committee in this House would have as much power to shape legislation as the majority, and would have equal power to accompany their views with affirmative bills, to stand against the finding of the majority, and compel the House to consider those bills instead of the action of the majority. That is the logic of his position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The majority of the House can do it.

Mr. HAZELTON. The rules of the House have fixed and laid down that a majority of the committee stands in the place of a majority of the House in shaping what legislation shall come back before the House to be considered by it; and if there is anything which we have learned in the last three Congresses, it is clearly this: that a majority of a committee can absolutely control what is to come to this House for its consideration from that committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Except by the unanimous consent of the House or by a vote of the majority.

Mr. HAZELTON. You cannot find a precedent for any such position in the last fifty years, I venture to assert.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because no such precedent was ever made.

Mr. HAZELTON. Because it was so unreasonable that it would not have been made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because it was absolutely preposterous to raise a question which would establish such a precedent.

Mr. HAZELTON. It was never necessary, for no man would have raised such a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon this question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I spoke in the time of my friend from Illinois, and I want to add only a word in my own right unless the Chair has made up his mind already upon the question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has any new suggestions the Chair will hear him.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was going to say with some emphasis that when the House gave unanimous consent to this minority of the committe to bring in this report, and when that minority chose to make a resolution attached to their report, that resolution is here to be placed upon the Calendar, and a motion to place it there is in order. That is a succinct statement of the case, I think.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

With the importance of this question the Chair has nothing whatever to do. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] presented the views of certain members of the Committee on the Judiciary, not a majority of the committee, under permission granted when the report of the committee on this subject was presented, and moves to have a resolution accompanying the views placed upon the Calendar. Now, there is no doubt but this belongs to the minority of the committee as a matter of right if it is to be regarded as a report at all. This question has frequently been raised, where a minority of a committee proposed to make a report and claimed the right to bring a subject before the House; but it has been always rejected and treated as though no such right existed, the majority of the committee alone being competent to bring in a report and submit it to the House for its consideration.

There is no case known to the Chair, and certainly none has been cited in the discussion of this point of order, to indicate that under any circumstances these views of the minority are to be regarded as a report.

As Cushing says in his admirable work on parliamentary law, "these views are sometimes submitted under the somewhat incongruous name of minority reports, when they are in no sense reports."

Now, to go back, at the time the report was made upon this subject the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] stated to the House that there were certain views of the minority which they might desire to present to the House, and asked on behalf of the minority that these should be printed, which request was granted. And it was then ordered, not that they should come in as a report, but that their views, dissenting from the report of the committee, should be received and printed, and, to use the exact language of the record, "the views will be received and be printed with the report of the majority." Consent was given for this and nothing more.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has cited Cushing's Manual of Parliamentory Law, and the Chair thinks it would be well enough to examine it further and have read a little more from the same paragraph and sentence from which the gentleman has already quoted. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

They [minority views] are received by the courtesy of the House, expressed by the ordinary vote of a majority and usually receive the same destination with the report; that is, they are printed, postponed, and considered in the same manner. But they are not in any parliamentary sense reports, nor entitled to any privilege as such; and their only effect is, in the first place to operate upon the minds of members as arguments, and secondly to serve as the basis for amendments to be moved on the resolution or other conclusion of the report. If they contain or recommend a bill it is read not as a bill, but as a part of the report and for the information of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the whole paragraph be read.

The SPEAKER. That is the whole of this chapter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to have read the first portion of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the portion of the paragraph just read which used the word "majority" has distinct reference to a majority of the House as a matter of courtesy having the right and power to allow the views of the minority to be presented and had no reference to the disposition of them on the House Calendars.

The Chair will cause the Clerk to read now from the House Journal proceedings in 1836, where the question was made whether or not the minority of a committee could make a report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hall, of Vermont, a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred so much of the message of the President of the United States, at the commencement of the session, as relates "to the report of the Postmaster-General, the condition and operations of the Post-Office Department, and every thing connected therewith," offered to submit to the House a paper, in the form of a report, which, he stated, contained the views of the minority of the committee on that part of the said message which suggests "the propriety of passing such a law as will prohibit, under severe penalties, the circulation, in the Southern States, through the mail, of incendiary publications, intended to instigate the slaves to insurrection."

The Speaker decided that, when reports from committees are called for, a report cannot be made from a minority of a committee, as a minority is not a committee; that the paper offered was not a report authorized to be made to the House by authority of the committee, and could not be received as a report from the minority, and that, consequently, it was not in order to offer the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under what seems to be the uniform practice all the Chair can do is to indicate that the action shall be taken which was directed to be taken on the 6th of June last when the majority report was introduced; and that is that the views of the minority shall be printed with the majority report.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to ask what is now the parliamentary status of the joint resolution presented by the minority?

The SPEAKER. It has no possible parliamentary status except that when the majority report shall come up for consideration it might be referred to only as a matter of information to the House; and it might furnish a basis upon which amendments might be offered to the action of the majority, if action can ever be taken on that. It is now on the table and it seems to call for no action on the part of Congress. That report concludes as follows:

We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none.

Mr. KNOTT. It is then in no sense a pending proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. Independently of the majority report, it is not, as the Chair apprehends.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. My parliamentary inquiry is this: it is shown from the record that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] had the floor properly by consent of the House to submit this report.

The SPEAKER. It is not a report.

Mr. HOLMAN. To submit whatever he has submitted. And having the floor, I claim he had a right to make, under that consent, the statement or report or whatever else it may be called—that having the floor rightfully he had the right to make whatever was the proper motion touching the subject-matter. Therefore he had a right, having the floor by consent, to move to refer that joint resolution to the Calendar.

Mr. POUND. But the subject-matter is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had only the right, except by unanimous consent, to have the resolution offered and printed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] states that he appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Maine moves to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not understand there is anything to appeal from.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, in which the Chair holds a minority of the committee cannot make a report and have it referred to the Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the Chair goes further than that——

Mr. ROBESON. Did not the Chair also decide that at this time, this not being a privileged motion, and no unanimous consent having been given for that motion, it is not in order if an objection be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hold the gentleman is out of order in presenting the views of the minority; but the Chair holds the gentleman from Kentucky did not present any report in the proper sense of the word.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make my appeal from the ruling of the Chair, which I understand to be this: that the Chair rules out of order the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky to refer this joint resolution to the Calendar. From that decision of the Chair I respectfully appeal.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Maine moves that the appeal be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to know whether the majority resolution accompanying the report of the majority of the committee is now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is the trouble. We want to get something on the Calendar.

Mr. COX, of New York. And that is what they are dodging.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands if the report of the committee had been accompanied by a bill or joint resolution, and had gone to the Calendar, then this matter would have taken the same course. It would have been printed and would have accompanied the majority report. Wherever the majority report went, under the uniform practice the minority views must go also. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] moves to lay upon the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from New York from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. And upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. Is it in order now for me to ask to have a statement read from the Digest?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question is not debatable now.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 97, nays 71, not voting 122; as follows:

The names of those voting were then read by the Clerk, and the result announced as above stated.

the reference of this joint resolution to the Calendar, and I know of no reason which can be assigned in support of a so-called point of order unless it be to gag this House from an expression of its views on the subject of these land grants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to know what becomes of the constantly reiterated protests on that side against allowing the majority of this House to vote and legislate as it pleases. Here is a proposition simply to allow the majority to express its views in reference to these land grants——

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against the gentleman from Kentucky that he must confine his remarks to the point of order under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am confining my remarks to the point of order, and the point of order is this: if a majority of that committee had closed their report with a joint resolution no man on this floor will deny, not even the Speaker of this House, they had a right to move its reference to the Calendar. When this House by unanimous consent conferred the privilege in the matter of a report on the minority of a committee it conferred equal privilege in the matter of reporting a bill or joint resolution, and the minority have a perfect right now to make the motion which my colleague has made, and I know no rule and I know of no dictum in any author on parliamentary law which will warrant its exclusion.

Mr. CASWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the question.

Mr. CASWELL. I wish to say there is only one report known to the rules, and that is the majority report. The minority may, by consent, present their views, but those views must follow the majority report. If they have accompanied those views with a joint resolution it is simply in explanation of those views. It is not a joint resolution as would be a joint resolution coming from a majority, but it is only a part of the views of the minority and must follow the majority report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Only one point further. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, the point I make is this, and I wish the Speaker to keep that in mind, that it is competent for the gentleman from Kentucky under the circumstances to present his motion, and it is the duty of the Speaker to submit that motion to the House, and it is in the power of the House to determine by a majority of the vote whether the resolution shall go to the Calendar or not.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let me say a word. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when the House gave unanimous consent that this report might be brought in it was simply on the ground that, the report not being ready to accompany the majority report, the courtesy was extended to the minority to file their views. If the position taken by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] be true, then the minority of every committee in this House would have as much power to shape legislation as the majority, and would have equal power to accompany their views with affirmative bills, to stand against the finding of the majority, and compel the House to consider those bills instead of the action of the majority. That is the logic of his position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The majority of the House can do it.

Mr. HAZELTON. The rules of the House have fixed and laid down that a majority of the committee stands in the place of a majority of the House in shaping what legislation shall come back before the House to be considered by it; and if there is anything which we have learned in the last three Congresses, it is clearly this: that a majority of a committee can absolutely control what is to come to this House for its consideration from that committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Except by the unanimous consent of the House or by a vote of the majority.

Mr. HAZELTON. You cannot find a precedent for any such position in the last fifty years, I venture to assert.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because no such precedent was ever made.

Mr. HAZELTON. Because it was so unreasonable that it would not have been made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because it was absolutely preposterous to raise a question which would establish such a precedent.

Mr. HAZELTON. It was never necessary, for no man would have raised such a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon this question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I spoke in the time of my friend from Illinois, and I want to add only a word in my own right unless the Chair has made up his mind already upon the question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has any new suggestions the Chair will hear him.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was going to say with some emphasis that when the House gave unanimous consent to this minority of the committe to bring in this report, and when that minority chose to make a resolution attached to their report, that resolution is here to be placed upon the Calendar, and a motion to place it there is in order. That is a succinct statement of the case, I think.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

With the importance of this question the Chair has nothing whatever to do. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] presented the views of certain members of the Committee on the Judiciary, not a majority of the committee, under permission granted when the report of the committee on this subject was presented, and moves to have a resolution accompanying the views placed upon the Calendar. Now, there is no doubt but this belongs to the minority of the committee as a matter of right if it is to be regarded as a report at all. This question has frequently been raised, where a minority of a committee proposed to make a report and claimed the right to bring a subject before the House; but it has been always rejected and treated as though no such right existed, the majority of the committee alone being competent to bring in a report and submit it to the House for its consideration.

There is no case known to the Chair, and certainly none has been cited in the discussion of this point of order, to indicate that under any circumstances these views of the minority are to be regarded as a report.

As Cushing says in his admirable work on parliamentary law, "these views are sometimes submitted under the somewhat incongruous name of minority reports, when they are in no sense reports."

Now, to go back, at the time the report was made upon this subject the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] stated to the House that there were certain views of the minority which they might desire to present to the House, and asked on behalf of the minority that these should be printed, which request was granted. And it was then ordered, not that they should come in as a report, but that their views, dissenting from the report of the committee, should be received and printed, and, to use the exact language of the record, "the views will be received and be printed with the report of the majority." Consent was given for this and nothing more.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has cited Cushing's Manual of Parliamentory Law, and the Chair thinks it would be well enough to examine it further and have read a little more from the same paragraph and sentence from which the gentleman has already quoted. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

They [minority views] are received by the courtesy of the House, expressed by the ordinary vote of a majority and usually receive the same destination with the report; that is, they are printed, postponed, and considered in the same manner. But they are not in any parliamentary sense reports, nor entitled to any privilege as such; and their only effect is, in the first place to operate upon the minds of members as arguments, and secondly to serve as the basis for amendments to be moved on the resolution or other conclusion of the report. If they contain or recommend a bill it is read not as a bill, but as a part of the report and for the information of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the whole paragraph be read.

The SPEAKER. That is the whole of this chapter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to have read the first portion of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the portion of the paragraph just read which used the word "majority" has distinct reference to a majority of the House as a matter of courtesy having the right and power to allow the views of the minority to be presented and had no reference to the disposition of them on the House Calendars.

The Chair will cause the Clerk to read now from the House Journal proceedings in 1836, where the question was made whether or not the minority of a committee could make a report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hall, of Vermont, a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred so much of the message of the President of the United States, at the commencement of the session, as relates "to the report of the Postmaster-General, the condition and operations of the Post-Office Department, and every thing connected therewith," offered to submit to the House a paper, in the form of a report, which, he stated, contained the views of the minority of the committee on that part of the said message which suggests "the propriety of passing such a law as will prohibit, under severe penalties, the circulation, in the Southern States, through the mail, of incendiary publications, intended to instigate the slaves to insurrection."

The Speaker decided that, when reports from committees are called for, a report cannot be made from a minority of a committee, as a minority is not a committee; that the paper offered was not a report authorized to be made to the House by authority of the committee, and could not be received as a report from the minority, and that, consequently, it was not in order to offer the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under what seems to be the uniform practice all the Chair can do is to indicate that the action shall be taken which was directed to be taken on the 6th of June last when the majority report was introduced; and that is that the views of the minority shall be printed with the majority report.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to ask what is now the parliamentary status of the joint resolution presented by the minority?

The SPEAKER. It has no possible parliamentary status except that when the majority report shall come up for consideration it might be referred to only as a matter of information to the House; and it might furnish a basis upon which amendments might be offered to the action of the majority, if action can ever be taken on that. It is now on the table and it seems to call for no action on the part of Congress. That report concludes as follows:

We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none.

Mr. KNOTT. It is then in no sense a pending proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. Independently of the majority report, it is not, as the Chair apprehends.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. My parliamentary inquiry is this: it is shown from the record that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] had the floor properly by consent of the House to submit this report.

The SPEAKER. It is not a report.

Mr. HOLMAN. To submit whatever he has submitted. And having the floor, I claim he had a right to make, under that consent, the statement or report or whatever else it may be called—that having the floor rightfully he had the right to make whatever was the proper motion touching the subject-matter. Therefore he had a right, having the floor by consent, to move to refer that joint resolution to the Calendar.

Mr. POUND. But the subject-matter is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had only the right, except by unanimous consent, to have the resolution offered and printed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] states that he appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Maine moves to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not understand there is anything to appeal from.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, in which the Chair holds a minority of the committee cannot make a report and have it referred to the Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the Chair goes further than that——

Mr. ROBESON. Did not the Chair also decide that at this time, this not being a privileged motion, and no unanimous consent having been given for that motion, it is not in order if an objection be made.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make my appeal from the ruling of the Chair, which I understand to be this: that the Chair rules out of order the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky to refer this joint resolution to the Calendar. From that decision of the Chair I respectfully appeal.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Maine moves that the appeal be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. BLISS.

Mr. MCLANE with Mr. MILLER.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.

Mr. CARLISLE with Mr. FARWELL of Illinois.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MURCH. I object.

The names of those voting were then read by the Clerk, and the result announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 1620) to authorize the construction of a street-railway and wagon-road bridge over the Rio Grande River between the city of El Paso, Texas, and Paso del Norte, Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose;

A bill (H. R. No. 4174) for the erection of a public building at Marquette, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4178) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEAL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to submit a report.

Mr. NEAL. An hour and a half has been spent already this morning without the regular order being reached.

Mr. BAYNE. I merely desire to submit a report to go upon the Calendar.

Mr. NEAL. I will yield for a report.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, it must be withdrawn generally.

Mr. NEAL. I cannot withdraw it generally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] submitting a report?

There was no objection.

GENERAL ALFRED PLEASANTON.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5525) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasanton a major-general; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MATERIALS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sailing vessels for foreign account, pending at the close of the morning hour on Saturday last. The morning hour under the new rule now begins at twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to refer the pending bill and amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a point of order on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. On Saturday, when the House adjourned, or at least when this question was adjourned, we were in the progress of voting upon the amendment which I had the honor to offer. The question was taken, as the Speaker will remember, by a rising vote, then by tellers, then by yeas and nays; and the point being raised that there was no quorum, I moved a call of the House, which was refused. So that we were in the midst of a vote upon the amendment at the time the question went over. I now raise the question, and ask the Chair to rule upon it, whether it is in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means before a vote has been taken upon the amendment, which vote was being taken at the time the question went over.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the yeas and nays had been ordered upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. KASSON. Under the rule it is in order even after the previous question is ordered to move to commit.

The SPEAKER. But the point is——

Mr. TUCKER. That we are in the midst of a vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The House was dividing at the time that this question went over on Saturday.

Mr. O'NEILL. There was no quorum; hence the proceeding on the vote failed.

Mr. TUCKER. The point was made that no quorum had voted; and of course the vote must be taken again.

Mr. O'NEILL. A quorum showed itself at the end of the hour; hence I think all proceedings upon the matter ended then and there.

Mr. KASSON. The division was over; and after a division is over the motion to refer, it seems to me, is in order.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is not as to the division; but the House had ordered the yeas and nays to be taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, and although a vote was taken it disclosed no quorum voting. The point being made that no quorum voted, the question would immediately recur upon taking the vote anew, if no motion of higher privilege should be made.

Mr. HASKELL. But pending the declaration that there was no quorum came the motion that the House adjourn, which showed conclusively to the Chair, in ordinary parliamentary practice, that it was not the intention of the House at that time to force a quorum. In the same way as upon the arrest of a member for disorder the motion to adjourn cuts off that proceeding. Now, upon the reassembling of the House the question stands upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia as a new proposition, and pending that a ranking motion has been made—a motion to refer.

Mr. TUCKER. It may be a "ranking motion," but it seems to me a rank departure from correct parliamentary law for any gentleman to insist that while the House is in the act of voting on an amendment on which a vote by yeas and nays was inoperative because there was no quorum there can be interjected a new motion which takes the House away from the very question which was under decision at the time.

Mr. HASKELL. The very point I raise is that the House did not order the yeas and nays; there was no quorum to do so. Upon the motion for a call of the House there was no attempt made on the part of the House to compel a quorum, and the adjournment cut off the proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the House had ordered the yeas and nays. If the question were simply between the motion to amend and the motion to refer, the Chair would hold that the motion to refer must take precedence; but the question presents something more than that. The motion to amend was pending, and upon it the yeas and nays had been ordered. A call of the yeas and nays had taken place and a quorum was not disclosed.

Mr. KASSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. In view of the fact that the yeas and nays had been ordered on the amendment, the Chair must decline to entertain now the motion to refer.

Mr. KASSON. Then I make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa cannot be entertained at this time, because the House is voting upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The roll is not now being called, and there is no other time that the motion can be entertained except after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KENNA. What vote is required to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. It has been held that the ordering of the yeas and nays can be reconsidered by the vote of a majority. If the reconsideration be agreed to the question will immediately recur upon the ordering of the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNOTT. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the motion to reconsider the ordering of the yeas and nays—I do not care how frequently entertained by the House—never can be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in accordance with the practice.

Mr. KNOTT. It may be in accordance with the practice heretofore, but I make the point now, in the nature of things you cannot rob one-fifth of the members of the House of their right under the Constitution to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Kentucky in that respect, and, if the motion to reconsider should prevail, the question will recur on ordering the yeas and nays if the yeas and nays shall be demanded.

Mr. KNOTT. That shows the absurdity of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make the practice or the rule.

Mr. KNOTT. I understand the practice has been as the Chair has stated it, but it is a practice I never did accede to and never can.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If it is out of order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, why is it not equally out of order for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered? They stand exactly on the same principle. It is because the yeas and nays have been ordered and the House is dividing. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order, then the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] for precisely the same reason is out of order.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me make one remark on that point. I understand the Chair has decided, and I think correctly, that as the House when this matter went over, the hour having expired, on Saturday, went over until to-day, as the House was in the act of taking the vote by yeas and nays, the motion to recommit is not in order. Now, there is a motion made to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays. Suppose there is a reconsideration—allow me to call the attention of the Chair to the point—would the Speaker rule, there having been a reconsideration of the vote ordering the yeas and nays, it would be in order then for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer is of higher order.

Mr. TUCKER. But does not the Speaker see the logic that, having decided the motion to refer is out of order, by permitting the motion to reconsider to come in he allows that motion to refer to come in in order which he has decided to be out of order?

The SPEAKER. Perhaps it is the object of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] in making the motion to reach precisely that result. It is for the House to decide what it shall do.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask the Speaker this question. If the Speaker is right, as I think he is, that it is out of order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to make the motion to recommit to the Committee on Ways and Means, is it not equally out of order for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to move to reconsider the vote of the yeas and nays when we are acting under that order, and taking the yeas and nays on the amendment which I have moved? Will not the Speaker see that if his present decision is right that the motion to reconsider is out of order and cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not so. It gives the House a right to reconsider its action.

Mr. KNOTT. The Speaker holds it is in order to entertain the motion to reconsider the call for the yeas and nays. Suppose that motion prevails, does not the question immediately recur on ordering the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. Yes, when the question comes up on the amendment. Then any member can demand the yeas and nays, and on the order of one-fifth of those present the yeas and nays can be ordered. But if the gentleman has the right, as the Chair has indicated, to make the motion to refer, that would take precedence of the motion to amend, because paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides expressly for it.

Mr. KNOTT. With the permission of the Chair I wish to submit this point of order.

Mr. TUCKER. I raise the question of order on my friend from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. I raise the question of order on the gentleman from Iowa, and that is whether he can move to reconsider the ordering of the yeas and nays when he did not vote on that question.

Mr. KASSON. There was no record of the vote on that question, and it does not matter how I voted.

The SPEAKER. There has been no record on ordering the yeas and nays, and therefore the point does not lie. But only one point of order can be pending at the same time.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. There was a call of the yeas and nays, and on that call of the yeas and nays the gentleman from Iowa declined to vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNOTT. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The yeas and nays were ordered and the yeas and nays were called, but there was no quorum.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States guarantees to one-fifth of the members of the House the right to demand and have put on record the yeas and nays on any proposition. That being so, no majority of this House, however large, unless by unanimous consent, can deprive that one-fifth of that constitutional right. That being so, a motion to deprive them of that right is in derogation of the Constitution, and is manifestly out of order.

Now, let us look at this proposition ab inconvenienti. I make a motion, for instance, for the yeas and nays, one-fifth of the members present second it, and the demand is sustained. A gentleman moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, and a majority vote to sustain the demand for reconsideration. I call for the yeas and nays on that demand, and one-fifth of the members present order them. Another gentleman rises and moves to reconsider the vote by which that demand was sustained and it is carried, and one-fifth of those present again demand the yeas and nays upon that.

Is it not evident that you can go on, sir, without limit until the crack of doom, working in a complete circle in a vain attempt to get a vote upon any question at all as long as one-fifth of the members present see proper to insist upon their constitutional right which neither you nor any majority of the House can deprive them of. I maintain that the very absurdity of the proposition is so patent that I cannot see how it can possibly be entertained at all. By what authority can a majority of the House say to one-fifth of those present, "You shall not exercise your constitutional right?" If they have no authority to do that, what authority have they or has the Speaker to submit a question to the House which contemplates depriving them of that right?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to send to the desk and have read a ruling bearing upon this point?

Mr. KNOTT. I have no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the question before the House, and how did that question get before the House? Is not the status quo of Saturday, when we adjourned on this question, the status quo of this moment, the unfinished business coming over and occupying the present consideration of the House? If that be so, we were dividing at that time, and a motion was made to reconsider another motion while we were dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that the yeas and nays were ordered. The roll-call is not going on, and if it is in order to move to reconsider at any time it is in order now.

Mr. ATKINS. It is going on, I beg pardon of the Speaker; we are dividing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman hold that the roll-call is going on?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ATKINS. It ought to be going on at this moment.

The SPEAKER. As a matter of fact it is not going on, however.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There was no vote ordering the yeas and nays on Saturday. There were some thirty-odd members of the House who constituted one-fifth of the members of the House and who demand their constitutional right to have the yeas and nays entered upon the Journal. There was no vote, however, upon it. Therefore my colleague who makes a motion now to reconsider that vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered has no right to make it.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about the fact that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But not by a vote of the House.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask now to have read, as bearing upon the point of order, what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLOGG moved that the order by the House of the yeas and nays be reconsidered.

Mr. POLLOCK raised the question of order that it required four-fifths to reconsider an order for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER decided that according to the precedents a majority might reconsider the order, but that the question would immediately recur on ordering the yeas and nays, when one-fifth would be sufficient for that purpose. (February 14, 1848.)

Mr. POUND. But one motion to reconsider would be in order.

Mr. KNOTT. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I still have the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KNOTT. In a few minutes. This question, Mr. Speaker, so far as it establishes anything at all, establishes the inalienable right of one-fifth of this body to demand the yeas and nays, and also that four-fifths of the members cannot deprive them of that constitutional right. It establishes, further, that if four-fifths of the members present should be held competent to deprive the one-fifth of that right, they can immediately reassert it, and that the question, co instanti, recurs upon ordering the yeas and nays again before another motion can be entertained.

But the point I make is this: if there were ten thousand precedents to the contrary, that they cannot override the plain letter of the Constitution, and this continually recurring vicious precedent of allowing a reconsideration of a vote ordering the yeas and nays could not be held sufficient to override the plainest rule we have and the plainest rights laid down in the organic law of this country.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like the attention of the Speaker and of the House for a moment. It is clearly evident to my mind that the gentleman from Kentucky is right in the general principle of his argument, because, not that he is technically right and that the motion to reconsider cannot be put, for I believe it can be under the rule, but if the effect of that action is right one-fifth of the members can order the yeas and nays again after that reconsideration.

Now, I submit to the House, Mr. Speaker, that it is wise to go on and vote upon the amendment, and when the roll-call is concluded the motion to reconsider and lay on the table can be entertained by the Chair and the sense of the House can be tested in the matter by a positive vote; and I ask unanimous consent of the House that the roll be called on the amendment and the vote had, and after that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] can be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, following the precedents, it must entertain the motion. There seem to have been precedents during the entire history of the Congress of the United States in favor of entertaining the motion to reconsider a vote ordering the yeas and nays. The Chair might agree with the gentleman from Kentucky if this was an original question; but the decisions are all one way. It is very true, as has been stated, that after such a vote is reconsidered one-fifth of those present would still have the constitutional right to again order the yeas and nays on the same question.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] calls for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider were ordered—42 members voting therefor.

Mr. DUNN. I move now to reconsider that vote by which the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Arkansas can hardly be in earnest about that.

Mr. DUNN. I want to run the rule to a ridiculous result.

The SPEAKER. All parliamentary rules that are followed out improperly may run into absurdities.

Mr. DUNN. The position I take is that this runs into an absurdity.

Mr. ROBESON. It cannot be in order to reconsider a vote to reconsider.

Mr. DUNN. If any one makes the point of order on my motion let the Chair rule upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has simply ruled, following a line of precedents through the entire history of the House, that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered was in order. The Chair cannot entertain two motions of that kind at the same time.

Mr. DUNN. But this was a vote ordering the yeas and nays. Now, I move to reconsider that vote; and if a point of order is made on my motion, I ask the Chair to rule upon it.

The SPEAKER. It is like making several appeals at the same time. The Chair cannot present any such absurdity under the rule. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KENNA rose.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the first two names.

Mr. KENNA. I rose to a point of order before the call of the roll began. I ask the Chair to rule upon the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. That motion would undoubtedly be in order, but the Chair cannot entertain two motions of the same kind at the same time.

Mr. KENNA. This motion does not apply to the same vote as the other. The one is to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.] This does not apply to the same vote at all. The motion of the gentleman from Arkansas applies to the vote last taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that perfectly well. But it is the same character of motion.

Mr. KENNA. Does the Chair hold it out of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hold it out of order. But the Chair holds it cannot entertain two motions of the same kind at the same time.

Mr. KENNA. Does the Chair hold it to be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the Chair to decide whether the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas is in order or is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hold it would be in order if the House was not proceeding to vote on a similar motion.

Mr. KENNA. If the Chair holds the motion is out of order I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that the Clerk had commenced the roll-call and that two names had been called.

Mr. KENNA. I rose before the Clerk began, and was recognized.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll.

Mr. KENNA. Does the Chair entertain my appeal?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can submit no appeal pending the roll-call.

Mr. KENNA. I rose in my place and was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. There need be no difficulty about this. The Chair followed the precedents in entertaining the motion of the gentleman from Iowa. In every session of Congress, so far as the Chair is able to learn, certainly in all the Chair is familiar with, the practice has been to allow a motion to reconsider a vote by which the yeas and nays have been ordered. If presented as an original question the Chair might hold otherwise. But when the yeas and nays have been ordered on a motion of that kind, the Chair does not think it can entertain a similar motion and submit the question on that, going on indefinitely. In this the Chair follows exactly the precedent that two appeals cannot be submitted at the same time.

Mr. KENNA. I only desired the Chair to pass on that because it is a new proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hold the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas in order for the same reason that it has entertained the other motion; but it cannot entertain the two at the same time.

Mr. KENNA. And from the ruling of the Chair, that the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas is out of order, I desire to appeal, in order that there may be a decision of the House on this novel proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so rule. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 78, not voting 117; as follows:

So the order for the yeas and nays was reconsidered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. WEST with Mr. SCALES.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. ROSS.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. MASON with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. MARSH with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move that the bill with the pending amendment be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. I make the point of order that under the Constitution not a majority simply but four-fifths is required to reconsider the order for the yeas and nays, if a motion to reconsider such order can be entertained at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will simply state in answer to the gentleman that if it were an original question the Chair would sustain the point of order. But having looked at the precedents, and they seem to be as numerous as the sessions of Congress, beginning with the first, in which it has been held by all previous Speakers that a motion can be made to reconsider an order for the yeas and nays, which reconsideration can be carried by a majority vote, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KNOTT. And I make the further point of order that the question immediately recurs upon the demand for the yeas and nays, according to the authority read from the desk a while ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman that the yeas and nays can again be ordered at once if the vote is taken upon that question; but the Chair also holds that the motion to refer takes precedence.

Mr. KNOTT. The question recurs at once on the demand for the yeas and nays, and fairness to this side of the House requires it to be taken.

Mr. ERRETT. Pending the demand for the yeas and nays a motion to refer is made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The House is voting on the question, and the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] cannot therefore be entertained. In support of that point of order I wish to suggest that we quit off, when in session on Saturday last in the morning hour, in the midst of a vote. We now go back, if this reconsideration of the order for the yeas and nays can be had at all, right where we quit off, which was in the midst of a vote. I insist there is no power that can prevent this side of the House from having the yeas and nays on the question, if the constitutional number should desire them.

The SPEAKER. Nobody, so far as the Chair has heard, disputes that proposition. The question recurs——

Mr. McMILLIN. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be entertained we are deprived of our right to the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. If the vote is to be taken on the proposition to amend, it can be taken by yeas and nays if one-fifth of those present so order; but the motion to refer not being in order pending the order of the House to take the vote by yeas and nays, and that order being now reconsidered, the motion to refer becomes by the express terms of the rule in order, and must first be submitted.

Mr. KENNA. But on that point I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact which the gentleman from Tennessee has already suggested, that independently of the question of yeas and nays the House was dividing. A vote had been taken by tellers; and pending the division of the House on the amendment the motion to refer cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer is in order pending the other motion, because it is a privileged motion.

Mr. KENNA. Pending the other motion, but not pending the putting of the motion and a division upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate,) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, I make the point that the rule just read cannot apply, because the House is not in the condition upon which the rule was intended to operate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to make a suggestion, and call attention to the statement of the Digest in support of it. If the motion to refer had been submitted at the time the motion to amend was made the rule would undoubtedly have given precedence to the motion to refer, but it was not submitted at that time. The motion to amend was made, and the House was dividing upon that motion; it had gone to the extent of taking the vote by tellers, and the Digest expressly declares that when on taking a vote less than a quorum is present the question continues to occupy precisely the same status. That status is a division of the House. The House is in the act of dividing on this amendment, and by all the precedents——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite familiar with the status of this matter. A vote was taken by yeas and nays, and that vote was void because no quorum voted. The point of no quorum was made and then the question recurred on the amendment. The order for yeas and nays having just been reconsidered the motion is now made to refer, which motion is privileged over the motion to amend.

Mr. KENNA. The Chair cannot cite a precedent where any Speaker of this House has ever allowed a division of the House to be interrupted by the interjection of any motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman that a division of the House cannot be interrupted.

Mr. KENNA. The House is in the act of division.

Mr. KASSON. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The House has just reconsidered the vote by which it ordered the yeas and nays——

Mr. KENNA. But the House has not reconsidered the vote which it was taking by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the motion to refer is now in order. [Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, has not the hour for proceedings under the new rule expired?

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. My motion is pending?

The SPEAKER. It is; it goes over as unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate requested the return by the House of a concurrent resolution of the Senate to print additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and further insisted upon its amendments to said bill disagreed to by the House, and asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title: A bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney.

PRINTING REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, this being Monday, is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, resolutions of inquiry, and resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures for reference. Before proceeding with that order, the Chair desires to state that there is on the table a request from the Senate for the return of a resolution of that body for printing additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881. This resolution has already been referred to the Committee on Printing; but if there be no objection that committee will be discharged from its further consideration, and it will be returned to the Senate in accordance with the request. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

NICARAUGUA CANAL.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a privileged report.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman calls up his report, I desire to make a request of the House. The other day the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill to incorporate the Nicaraugua Canal Company; the bill being accompanied with a report. It was understood in the committee that the minority should be allowed to make a report; but the gentleman from Iowa by some oversight failed to ask such consent of the House. I desire now to ask authority to make a minority report and have the same printed with the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks to be allowed to submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon a measure on which a report has already been made.

Mr. KASSON. What is the bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill to incorporate the Nicaragua Canal Company.

Mr. KASSON. I am not disposed to make any objection to the submission of the views of the minority, but there should be some time named within which they shall be submitted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to state that immediately upon the committee perfecting the bill the gentleman had his report ready, and the minority had no opportunity to prepare a report before the bill was presented to the House.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest that the gentleman simply say "may be submitted at this session."

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know why the gentleman wishes to hold me down to this session. I expect to do it as soon as I possibly can; but why the gentleman should wish to restrain me to possibly a week I cannot understand; I do not accept it subject to such a qualification.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hear any objection to the gentleman presenting his views at such time during this session as they may be ready.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not ask it subject to the qualification of being put in during the session. If I am to be cut off——

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, I know that, and I am merely putting an inquiry to the Chair and not debating the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw his request if he wishes to do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object is not to withdraw it, but if it is to be refused by the action of the gentleman from Iowa, let it take that course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has stated that no objection would be made by him to the views being submitted during this session.

Mr. BLOUNT. I made no request of that sort. I asked to submit the views of the minority. If the gentleman wants to make that qualification let him do so. I am not going to consent to taking any such privilege on so important a question.

Mr. KASSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is customary to have some time named in order we may have the opportunity to see those views when they are presented, and if the entire remainder of this session is given, it seems to me to be enough, as after adjournment no one will be able to see the report. It is only fair the majority should see the views of the minority.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not object to their seeing it, but I do not want, on a question of such importance, to be restricted to so many days. The gentleman has had charge of it all the session.

Mr. KASSON. Will ten days after the close of the session be sufficient for the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. BLOUNT. I say to the gentleman from Iowa the minority will submit their views at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. NEAL. Let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. KASSON. I should not feel authorized to have the minority permitted to run into the next session. I will say, speaking for myself and not speaking for anybody else, I will agree to the gentleman having ten days after the adjournment of this session of Congress in which to submit the views of the minority.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well; I am content to take ten days after the close of the present session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The total amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House was $19,880,273.35; as it passed the Senate it appropriated $20,276,300.65; as agreed upon in conference it appropriates $20,038,000.65, or $157,727.30 more than as it passed the House and $238,300 less than as it passed the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the House before a vote is taken upon the adoption of this report to the enormous increase of officers and salaries contemplated by this bill, and to arrest the attention of the House to those points while I make a brief parliamentary inquiry; that is, whether or not under the rule the report of the conference committee is to be printed as a separate document?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then does it go into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. It will go into the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman submitting this report whether the conferees in considering the disagreeing votes of the two Houses have increased the number of clerks in the Departments beyond the number agreed upon by either of the Houses?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; by no manner of means. If the gentleman had noticed the concluding part of the report he would have seen that the Senate amendments increased the House bill, in round numbers, $400,000, and that as a result of the conference the Senate receded $238,000, in round numbers, and the House assented in conference to an increase over the House bill of $157,000, or about that sum, which is a very material decrease in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was that on account of the increased number of officials allowed by the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. Substantially.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was it principally for the increased number?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. How many new offices are created by this bill and clerks provided for which were not provided under this bill in the last Congress?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I will state that I see my colleague on the committee of conference, the gentleman from Tennessee, is on his feet, and I hope he will be allowed to have such time as he may desire to explain his position with reference to this report.

Mr. ATKINS. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. I was going to inquire, with the consent of my colleague on the committee, who has charge of the bill, if he had any remarks to make or motion to submit?

Mr. CANNON. I had, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. I presumed the gentleman had, although he seemed to be a little dilatory.

Mr. CANNON. I propose to move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. ATKINS. Before that is done, permit me to submit two or three observations. It will be observed by the House, Mr. Speaker, that my name is not appended to the conference report, and perhaps it is due to the House as well as to my friends on this side of the House to assign the reasons why my name does not appear there.

In the first place, I did not vote for the bill when it passed the House; and I did not vote for it for what in my judgment were good and sufficient reasons.

I thought it was too large a bill, and that it provided too large a force altogether. That was my opinion, and I did not vote for it for that reason. Now, I am not going to give the details of that reason. I shall not go into the minutiæ of the matter. What I have said must be sufficient upon that point. In the next place, the Senate, not content with the bill as it went from the House, so far as the clerical force of the Government is concerned, has added in round numbers one hundred employés to the catalogue of clerks and employés.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where are they to be assigned?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know that I can give the details exactly, but this provides six additional clerks in the State Department; in the Treasury Department nineteen; the War Department is increased twenty-six; the Navy Department two; the Interior Department seven; the Post-Office Department has been increased sixteen; the Department of Justice is increased two, one of them being a law clerk at a salary of $2,000 a year; and then the Senate has increased its own employés thirteen, and five additional employés have been given to the House. This, it will be found, amounts to ninety-six additional clerks. I was not in favor of those additional clerks.

Perhaps there might be some that were necessary; I won't say but that some of them might not have been; but if they were needed some of those who are not needed might have been substituted and not employ or appoint new ones, as far as that is concerned. I think the force is too large now. Then I have another objection to the bill. It has created some new officers. For instance, it has created the office of Assistant Secretary of War and Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Now, we have gotten along for this one hundred years past without these officers, and I believe we can get along some time longer without them. We went through one of the most gigantic wars of modern times, one of the most tremendous that has shocked the face of the earth, and yet we had no Assistant Secretary of War or Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and did not feel the want of them. I do not myself believe that it is necessary to have them now. Therefore I object to the creation of these new officers. Then, sir, we increase some salaries which I do not favor. For instance, the bill increases the salaries of the Utah commissioners from $3,000 to $5,000 each, a very considerable increase—66⅔ per cent.—and that during the very session of Congress which created them.

The report increases the salaries of the Assistant Postmasters-General First, Second, and Third, $500 each. Now, I am not very certain that there is not some apology for that; and I will not say that on that account alone I would have withheld my assent from this conference report. It may be necessary. The Post-Office Department is increasing very rapidly. Eight or ten per cent. a year is the regular increase of that Department. And if these offices have been at $3,500 always I am not certain that there is not some justice in this increase. I desire to be fair.

Then the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has his salary increased $500. I do not believe there is a particle of necessity for that; not one particle. There are fewer Indians to-day than there were twenty years ago. Their number is growing less every day; and we are appropriating now four or five million dollars—in round numbers, $5,000,000—a year for the Indians, whereas some years ago we appropriated $8,000,000 for this Department. And I do not believe there is any necessity for the deputy commissioner, now that we are expending $5,000,000 a year, when we did not have him at the time we were expending $8,000,000.

The report increases also the salary of the surveyor-general of Dakota. I think, sir, the salaries of all the surveyors-general are too large. The truth of the business is it is an unnecessary office. I became convinced of that years ago; and the more I have heard that office discussed on this floor the better satisfied I am I was correct in that opinion. But as the House of Representatives, and as the Senate in concurring with the action of the House, as those two bodies have failed to reduce the salaries of the surveyors-general of all the rest of the Territories I think it was but right that the salary of the surveyor-general of Dakota should be increased as it is. At this time it is $500 below the salary of any of the rest. I think, therefore, that is right in itself; but I think the others should have been brought down instead of his salary being put up. Two thousand dollars is the present salary of the surveyor-general of Dakota; $2,500 the salary of each of the surveyors-general of all the other Territories.

Then the report increases the salary of the friend of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] on my left—a very worthy old gentleman—$250. I shall not make any attack on that. I refer to the Actuary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRISON. He has got brains, that old gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. These are the leading objections that I had to signing the report. I sympathize with the gentleman who has charge of the bill, I will remark while I am up, in the disagreeing feature of the report; that is as to the transfer of the records of the Surgeon General's Office, so far as they relate to pensions, to the office of the Adjutant-General. I entirely sympathize with him upon that point, and I should stand by him, and I hope our friends on that side, if they will allow me to make the suggestion with regard to this matter, will stand by the gentleman who has charge of this bill upon the important matter of transferring the hospital records and the records containing the military history of the soldiers of the country to the Adjutant-General's Office, and also of the quota of clerks, so far as they have to do with the matter of pensions, to the Adjutant-General's Office.

Mr. CANNON. I was desirous my colleague on the committee should first note his objections to this report, as I desired to see just what they were. I will now very briefly call attention to the report, and answer the gentleman's objections. But before I do so I want to state to the House that I am indebted to my colleague on the sub-committee [Mr. ATKINS] for many valuable suggestions and much valuable work in the preparation of this bill; and I regret that he did not see his way clear to sign the conference report. But, as each one must act for himself, whether as a member of a committee or a member of the House, I have no complaint to make. It occurs to me, however, if he had looked over the whole ground and then had taken a bird's-eye view of the appropriations in the last Congress, some, at least, of his objections might have been removed.

The bill, as I before stated, was increased by the Senate $396,000. As it passed the House it carried $19,880,273.35; as it passed the Senate it carried $20,276,300.65; an increase of $396,027.30. As it is now reported in this conference report it carries $20,038,000.65; which, as I before stated, is an increase over the House bill of $157,727.30; and it is a decrease from the Senate bill of $238,300. It is true that most of this increase of $157,000 was for clerks, and that a large portion of the decrease that the Senate conferees submitted to in this report was for clerks.

I thought, so far as the number of clerks was concerned, when the House passed this bill, in the main the bill was sufficient, and so stated. I must state however, that the bill was made economically after very considerable investigation, and I am not sure now, after having met the conferees and inquired perhaps a little more fully, but what in some of the Departments, notably in the Post-Office Department, the extraordinary increase of business in the country demanded a slight additional increase in the clerical force. For that reason the House conferees met those of the Senate, as I have stated before.

It is true that we provide in this bill for an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy at $3,500 each. It is true those offices never have been provided for before. This was in pursuance of a Senate amendment. The House receded, and perhaps it is due to the House as well as to the committee that I should state very briefly the reasons which moved us to recede.

It will be recollected, or is known to gentlemen, that the War Department and the Navy Department, with the exception of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, are run substantially by the Army and Navy. If you go there and look up the head of a bureau, you will find that he is an Army officer or a Navy officer; and many of their assistants belong to the regular Army and the Navy. Those two Departments are and always have been under the traditions and the practice and largely under the control of the Army and the Navy.

Now the Army has its proper place, and the Navy has its proper place; and I want to say that in my opinion, and I think in that opinion the House and the country will concur, it is not good policy that the Army and the Navy should dominate in the Department of War and the Department of the Navy here in Washington. Those Departments should have more of a civil bent, if you please, than they now have.

Therefore when the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy appeared before us and stated that they desired to have these assistant secretaries given them in order that they might be able to make more full inquiry, that they might have a civil arm at their command, and not have to rely exclusively upon the officers of the Army and Navy in all matters of detail in administration, we thought the request was reasonable, and that it would be money well spent to give an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to be appointed from civil life. And this bill, as we report it from the committee of conference, provides for those two additional officers. So much for that.

I believe from the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that he substantially agrees in the propriety of the increase of salary of $500 to each of the three Assistant Postmasters-General. I must confess that I believe it a wise increase; and I want to say that if under the House rules we had had the power to make that increase upon the appropriation bill in the first place, for one I should have favored it.

The increase in salaries made by this bill as now reported, provided you take into account the $3,500 each to the Assistant Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, amounts to $20,200. If you deduct those two salaries, however, it amounts to only $13,200, made up of the following items: to the Utah commissioners an increase of $2,000 each. The law as passed gave them only $3,000 each. The Senate thought that was insufficient and that they ought to have $5,000 each. I must confess I was strongly inclined to that opinion myself; and the majority of the committee of conference agreeing with me, we receded from our disagreement to that amendment and consented that the Utah commissioners should receive a salary of $5,000 a year each instead of $3,000 as provided in the original law, making an increase of $10,000 on that item alone.

Then comes the Assistant Secretary of War with a salary of $3,500; and then the Assistant Secretary of the Navy with a salary of $3,500; making $7,000 for the two. Then comes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with an increase of salary of $500. I think that is an apt and proper increase, and I want to indorse it. No man who is competent and has the integrity he ought to have to act as Commissioner of Indian Affairs but what will amply earn the salary of $4,000 a year, as we propose to give him.

Then there is the Assistant Commissioner of Pensions, whose salary is increased $1,200. That was involved in the original cast of the bill, or rather in the original estimate as submitted by the commissioner of Pensions. It was not placed in the House bill when we reported it, because it was subject to a point of order. I think that is an apt increase.

Then the three Assistant Postmasters-General are given an increase of salary of $500 each, making $1,500 in all for them. The increase of salaries by this bill, as before stated, is $20,200 in all, including the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War. If you deduct their salaries and also deduct the increase of salary for the Utah commissioners, then the increase of salaries by this bill amounts in round numbers to only about $3,000. Nearly all the increase is upon those two items.

I want to call the attention of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations and of the conference, to the fact that during the Forty-sixth Congress, when he so worthily presided over the Committee on Appropriations, noted for his efficiency and economy, he originated and assented to an increase of salaries during that Congress of $14,700.

I can run over the items in a minute. The salary of the chief clerk of the Treasury Department was increased from $2,700 to $3,000 a year. The salaries of the judges of the Territorial courts, twenty-five in number, were increased from $2,600 each to $3,000 each. The salary of the Commissioner of Pensions was increased from $3,600 to $5,000 a year. The salary of the Auditor of Railroad Accounts was increased from $3,600 to $5,000; afterward reduced by the Senate to $4,500 a year. The assistant treasurer at Boston had his salary increased from $4,500 to $5,000 a year. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics had his salary increased from $2,400 to $3,000 a year, and the Assistant Secretary of State had his salary increased from $3,500 to $4,500 a year; making an aggregate of increase during that Congress of $14,700.

I am not criticising or finding fault with the gentleman on account of this increase. On the contrary, I think it was apt and proper. But I merely wish to call his attention to the fact that in the extended service of this rapidly growing country, these slight increases will almost necessarily creep in, cut and carve and investigate as you will.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman will allow me to say that in most of the instances he mentions where salaries were increased the increase did meet my approval. I believed that the interests of the service required it. I believed that by the enlargement of the governmental service there were placed upon the shoulders of these officers additional burdens much larger than those borne by the incumbents of the same offices years back, and therefore their salaries were properly increased. As a notable case I mention that of the Commissioner of Pensions. As to the officer at Boston, the increase was made upon the solicitation of almost the entire delegation from that State. With regard to the Territorial judges their salaries were at one time $3,000, but had been stricken down to $2,600; and we were assured that in the Territories it costs a great deal more to live than it does in most of the States. Therefore I felt, and the committee felt, and the House felt, and Congress felt, and the country feels that it was perfectly just and right to put up those salaries.

With regard to the Assistant Secretary of State, the increase did not originate in the Committee on Appropriations or in this House, but if I remember correctly was an amendment of the Senate, which was acceded to upon the part of the House committee because it was urged by the Secretary of State and by the conferees of the Senate. The other increases I stand by to-day.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; but you may take the increases made in the present bill and compare them with those made in the last Democratic Congress, and I am firmly of the opinion that while the former increases were proper to be made these are equally proper, and are not, when you come to examine them, larger in amount.

One word as to the surveyors-general. We did increase the salary of the surveyor-general of Dakota to $2,500, his salary having been $500 below that of the others. I think this a proper increase, because he has more duty to perform than probably any other three surveyors-general in the whole country. It may be that the others are getting too much; but I will say to my friend from Tennessee that one pretty good evidence that their salaries are not exorbitant is the fact that they are only $2,500 as we find them in the present law, after our Democratic friends have been six years in power in the House and having followed the policy of decreasing salaries quite generally under the Executive.

Now, then, my friend said he did not vote for this bill originally when it passed the House, because it bore too great an increase. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the total increase of this bill as it passed the House over the present law was $1,742,430 for an increase of the pension force, and the total other increase was only $220,153.

Mr. SPRINGER. For increase of official force?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; for increase of official force exclusive of increase in the Pension Office. But it is not necessary to discuss the increase of the Pension Office, as that was in pursuance of a policy begun by this side of the House and, I think, demanded by the country.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, with his permission.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. When he says it is an increase over the present law by some $200,000, does he take into account the force carried by indefinite appropriations? Would there, in other words, be any increase if you took that into account?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; there would be an increase of the official force.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I am right, and I wish to inquire how much his bill carries of force heretofore paid from the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON. Three hundred and eighty-one thousand dollars in round numbers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Illinois in this connection allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. How many new places are created by this bill in clerical and official force of the Government over the existing law?

Mr. CANNON. I cannot tell the gentleman without a little addition. Here it is, and I will answer the gentleman's question: not considering the pension people, that is, the people carried on the bill to adjust claims in connection with the payment of pensions, it is about two hundred and sixteen.

Mr. ATKINS. The bill originally had one hundred and fifty-seven over and above those for pension purposes. The Senate has increased that number by ninety-six to one hundred. It will be about two hundred and fifty-five.

Mr. SPRINGER. How many are provided by the bill for persons having some connection with the administration of the Pension Bureau?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question. After examination, in round numbers, the total increase of this bill, not considering the increase in the pension force, is about two hundred and sixteen.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Tennessee says it is two hundred and fifty.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will ascertain on investigation he is mistaken.

Mr. ATKINS. I made the remark that we had increased outside of the Pension force about one hundred and fifty-seven or one hundred and sixty-seven in the original bill as it passed the House. Since then it has been increased about ninty-six by the Senate, making in all about two hundred and fifty. Now, so far as the Pension force is concerned it numbers twelve hundred and ten employés, at a cost of $1,742,430.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will give us the table showing it in detail as he has it before him.

Mr. CANNON. I will refer to it, but I will not stop to go over it again. It is contained in full in the report of the Committee on Appropriations. It is also in the remarks I submitted when this bill was reported to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does this bill decrease the force in any one Department of the Government?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. In what Department?

Mr. CANNON. It makes a marked decrease in the Navy Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. Below existing law?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, below existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. In what respect?

Mr. CANNON. In the number of employés, and their cost.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there any decrease in the State Department?

Mr. CANNON. There is no decrease in the State Department. On the contrary, if my memory serves me, there is a slight increase.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman take into consideration the number of persons borne on what is called the temporary roll?

Mr. CANNON. I cannot yield, or reply in a full, thorough, and exhaustive manner upon all of these points, which have been already explained over and over again, and are fully set out in House report No. 1276, first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, as made by the Committee on Appropriations when the bill was first reported, as my friend will find if he chooses to examine it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that this contains the number of persons discontinued?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; it covers the whole ground from A to izzard.

Mr. FLOWER. I suppose, then, these two hundred additional men, or whatever the number may be, will be kept busy all summer and fall in franking campaign documents, as I perceive that the language has been stricken out of the bill, providing—

That no part of the contingent fund appropriated by this act shall be expended in the payment of clerks employed by Senators and members of the House of Representatives?

Mr. CANNON. Of course, when you enter the realm of supposition, with the mind of my imaginative friend from New York, God knows where it will stop. But I cannot be responsible for his suppositions; I am only dealing with facts now.

Mr. ATKINS. I am sure my colleague on the committee does not desire to mislead the House; and as to the number of clerks borne by this bill over and above the number provided by law, I wish to state that I was not referring entirely to the Departments, but to the number aggregated in the bill. The additional force in the Departments is two hundred and thirty-five, and eighteen to the House and Senate, which would make two hundred and fifty-three in all, as I have said.

Mr. CANNON. After consulting the clerk of the committee at my side I made the reply I did, and his statement to me is that the increase of number of clerks in Departments is about two hundred and sixteen, and of employés in the House and Senate is eighteen—in all two hundred and thirty-four.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a very important matter, and the committee ought to agree a little more harmoniously as to the facts.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say in all kindness to my friend that criticism does not lie in his mouth, for I have patiently listened to him ask a dozen questions which have already been answered a half dozen times in response to inquiries upon this floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Inasmuch as the committee of conference themselves or the members of the Committee on Appropriations disagreed as to the facts, it cannot be surprising that I am in the dark.

Mr. CANNON. I am not responsible for the disagreement of my friends upon the other side of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I knew of course what had been agreed to with reference to the Pension Department heretofore, but I did not know what the result of the action of the committee of conference was in respect to that matter.

Mr. CANNON. The conference report states exactly what it is. The only criticism on the ground of extravagance in increased expenditures that this bill is subject to is this increase of the additional force in the Pension Office and the appropriation necessary for their payment. Now, a Republican committee reported this bill, the Republican majority substantially of that committee agreed upon it, knowing it involved large additional expense for pensions. Now, while we must bear the blame of that apparently large increase, if any, I trust my friends upon the other side will allow us whatever credit may belong to the action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the close of a few additional remarks I will move the adoption of the conference report; and while upon my feet it is perhaps well enough that I should say that I will then, in the event that the House adopts the conference report, move to insist upon the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered from 330 to 337 inclusive; and I do not think it is necessary to talk at any length touching these amendments. I will, however, ask the attention of the House to the point in controversy, because if the House adopts the conference report it closes up the whole bill except section 6, which I have specified.

This section provides for a discretion in the Secretary of War to consolidate the pension records in the Surgeon-General's Office and the office of the Adjutant-General under one head, and then directs the transfer of those records to the new War, State, and Navy Department building, so as to get them out of harm's way, where they can be economically, properly, and safely examined. In perfect justice to the House, permit me to say that I am satisfied that the committee of conference could have agreed upon one-half of this section, which provides for the consolidation of the records, and we could have agreed upon it in this way. The Senate conferees objected that the Secretary of War might take this as a direction for a consolidation. We replied that our only object was to carry out the law as it now is and to clothe him with power to exercise the discretion which he now has. Under that discretion it is within his power to take the records from the Adjutant-General's Office and put them in the Surgeon-General's Office or vice versa. But that power is not a fruitful one, for the reason that if you examine the bill you will find the contingent fund which contains an appropriation for the furniture and contingencies is so much for the Adjutant-General's Office and so much for the Surgeon-General's Office, and we finally, I am satisfied, could have agreed to strike out that part of the section and merely provide that the Secretary of War might have power to use the two contingent funds interchangeably, leaving in him the discretion and responsibility, if he saw proper to exercise it, by making the consolidation in the event that the public services demanded it.

But when we come to the other half of the section we struck a rock and could not approach an agreement. The other half of the section directs that these records be transferred to a fire-proof building. If the House will give me its attention just two minutes—I will not make the statement longer than that—I think I can revive the memory of the House touching this item.

We found on investigation, when we were making this increased appropriation for the pension force, that the records the force would have to examine in the Adjutant-General's Office are situate in seven imperfect, unsafe buildings, not owned by the Government, but leased and not fire-proof. We found that the Surgeon-General's records were in two buildings, the old Ford Theater, and the Holtzman building. We inspected the buildings in person. And, if any of you gentlemen have not been there, if you will step inside that old Ford building where the small army of clerks are at work, almost as thick as bees in a hive, you will perhaps agree with me it is the worst place to have so large a body of men at work in this city or anywhere else in the country.

Now, when we asked about this item, bringing the Secretary of War before us, and the Commissioner of Pensions and the Adjutant-General and the Surgeon-General, we found that they required to have a considerably larger force of clerks because these records were so scattered. We found further on inspection that those records were absolutely in danger, every day and every hour, of destruction. They are more insecure than if in frame or brick buildings in any of the little villages in the country.

There was but one thing for us to do, and unanimously we resolved to find fire-proof buildings where these records could be placed, and where they would be safe and could be economically handled and examined. The result of that inquiry was that the fire-proof buildings to be leased in this city by the Government are not to be found; they do not exist. Then it was we inquired whether the Government owned any such buildings. We found it did. We found this magnificent State, War, and Navy Department building; we found that the north wing was to be completed in October, and the south wing, which I said the other day would accommodate a thousand pension clerks, only had fifty-six people in it all told; that they were there lost, so to speak, in space. And we then performed the duty, as we thought we ought to do, of recommending this House to direct the transfer of these records which are in such peril into that building, designating what parts of it should be taken; taking care, however, out of consideration for the dignity of the State Department, to leave it twice as much room as any other Department in this Government occupies; yes, three times as much, in comparison with the number of employés, as any other Department or office in this Government occupies.

Well, the House agreed with us. You passed this bill. You said it was good economy. You said it would be negligence akin to crime not to place these records on which so much depends inside of a fire-proof building, and of which records, as a friend near me suggests, there is but one copy in the world. Our bill went to the Senate. The Senate struck that proposition out; and it is but fair for me to state the grounds on which they based their action.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us hear them.

Mr. CANNON. They say they will not enter upon this matter. They do not care to inquire how much office space there is in this building or in that building; they do not care to inquire whether there are fifty-six clerks or a thousand clerks occupying the State Department building. They say that is a matter of administration; that is a matter the Secretaries must adjust between themselves. And therefore they will not even inquire as to the propriety or necessity of thus disposing of this room. The reply to that position is, Congress makes the law. We vote the appropriation. We appropriate for the clerks; the people pay the bills. And when this great interest of the people requires caring for, and it can be cared for in the buildings that we now have, we say it is our duty as the law-making power, and as the Secretaries have not made this adjustment, to step in and enact this law, making the adjustment for them.

Now, I state to the House that I will not, if I should chance to be a member of another conference committee, that I never will sign a conference report in which the House recedes from its position upon this section 6, unless the House instructs me or otherwise directs me so to do. After making this statement I want to ask the House again, in conclusion, to disagree to these amendments of the Senate, and to disagree in such a way that it will be understood that the House insists in fact as well as in form upon its disagreement. For one, if these records are not to be housed, if this increased force is not to be utilized in this way, if this measure of protection is not to be taken, I think it is of that degree of importance to the material interests of the country that the country should judge between the Representatives of the people who originate the appropriation bills and the body which can only amend them. I shall ask in conclusion that the House disagree to these amendments of the Senate, and otherwise adopt the conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. A question, yes; and then I desire to yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask a question in regard to the provision for publishing the volumes of decisions of the Supreme Court. Under the present law the reporter of the Supreme Court is entitled to receive a salary of $2,500 a year for the first volume of the reports; and if he publishes a second volume he is then to receive an additional salary of $1,500. He is to furnish the Government three hundred copies of each volume of those reports without any charge to the Government.

Now, the effect of that provision of law is this: if he publishes two volumes of the reports then he receives a salary of $4,000 a year. From that you deduct $600, being the value of three hundred copies of each of the volumes at $2 a copy; so that the real amount paid him from the Treasury is but $3,400 a year.

Under the provision now in the bill he is to receive for his first volume $4,500; for his second volume $1,200; he is to have a clerk at $1,200 and contingencies amounting to $600; making a total of $7,500 a year. Now, if you deduct from that sum the amount allowed under the present law, $3,400, it will be seen that the amount to come out of the Treasury will be increased by this bill by $4,100. And all that is done apparently for the purpose of enabling Congress to fix the price of these reports at $2 per copy to the lawyers who purchase them.

Now, the question I want to ask is this: Can Congress, composed largely of members of that profession, afford to adopt a provision of law that will increase the charge upon the Treasury by the sum of $4,100 a year for the simple purpose of reducing the price of these reports to the legal profession of the United States? Can we afford to do that?

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I will state that the salary of the reporter of the Supreme Court as paid from the Treasury now is $2,500 a year for the first volume and $1,500 for the second volume; making $4,000 in all.

Mr. HOLMAN. And he furnishes three hundred copies of each volume to the Government free of cost.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; that is true. But we found, having the reporter before us, that he gets a royalty from the publishers upon each volume of $1,750, making a royalty for each year of $3,500. In addition to the payment of that royalty to him by the publishers, the publishers furnish the three hundred volumes to be given the Government without expense to the reporter. Therefore the total compensation of the reporter of the Supreme Court is now $7,500 a year.

We found further that out of that amount he is compelled to pay for the employment of a clerk at $1,200 a year; to pay for office rent $600 a year, making $1,800, which deducted from his total compensation leaves him a net compensation of $5,700 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question; I am merely stating the facts.

It will be remembered by the House that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] or the other gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] or perhaps both of them, as well as various other gentlemen in the House, insisted upon an amendment to this bill directing the printing of these reports at the Public Printing Office, and I believe fixing the salary of the reporter at $5,000 a year. The Senate struck out that amendment.

I called the attention of the House to that fact when we reported this bill a week ago upon a disagreeing conference report, and told the House substantially what we could do in this matter in conference, and asked for a substantial expression of opinion on the part of the House. The result was that the Senate refused absolutely to recede from its amendment. We could not get the House amendment touching these reports and their publication at the Printing Office for the reason, as the Senate claimed, that if you publish these reports at the Government Printing Office they would soon come to be considered as other public documents are, and the result would be that the Treasury would be very largely mulcted by Congress voting these reports as public documents.

Finally we were enabled to agree upon a proposition to pay the Supreme Court reporter directly from the Treasury just what he now gets; that is, $5,700 a year net compensation, $1,200 for clerk hire, and $600 for office rent.

Mr. CASWELL. Contingencies.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, for contingencies; still requiring the reporter to furnish to the Government, free of charge, three hundred copies of each volume of these reports. We also provide in addition that he shall sell these volumes of the report to the public at $2 per volume.

I am not a friend of this provision; I was not a friend of the original amendment, or of the provision as reported by the conference. I was content to let the law remain as it now is; but as the servant of the House I did the best I could.

As the law now is, the people who buy the reports of the Supreme Court pay the $3,500 a year royalty given the reporter by the publishers of these volumes, which is so much of his salary. Next they pay for the three hundred copies of each volume that are furnished to the Government free of cost.

Now, that is somewhat of a tax on the people who buy these reports. I undertake to say that there is no other book published by the Government or under the auspices of the Government where the people who buy the books are taxed to the extent of five or six thousand dollars a year for the privilege of buying the books besides paying for the books themselves.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend still misapprehends my question. It is conceded that by this proposition there is a material increase in the compensation paid out of the Treasury to this reporter. The question I put to the gentleman is whether for the purpose of having these reports furnished more cheaply than heretofore we can afford to have additional compensation paid to the reporter out of the Treasury on account of the reduced price at which the reports are furnished?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the question in about as short a time as it has taken the gentleman to ask it. I am not, I will state again, a friend of this proposition. I have acted as the servant of the House in getting the best compromise I could. I will say further that Congress can always afford to do right. I do not think it right to tax the people who buy three thousand five hundred or four thousand copies of these books each year $5,000 over their cost for the privilege of buying them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend say that there is no way of cutting off the royalty except by taking the money out of the Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will complete my answer. After we have relieved those who buy these books from the payment of that royalty, we still leave upon them, after paying for the books they buy, the burden of paying for the three hundred copies of each volume of the reports furnished free to the Government. This is the whole proposition. It is with the House to determine the question. I have no pride of opinion in the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. The obligation to furnish the Government with three hundred copies of each volume of the reports exists already under the law, and the Government has been paying but $4,000. Now, we propose to take from the Treasury $7,900 in order that these volumes may be reduced in price to those who desire to purchase them. What I object to is the taking of money out of the public Treasury in order that a book desired by the legal profession may be purchased more cheaply in the market. I do not think Congress has a right to do this.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly content to let the House vote on the question. I certainly shall not grieve if the House declines to concur. While I am not a friend of the proposition, I do not think the country will complain if we relieve the people who buy these reports from the tax of $5,000 which they now pay every year over and above the cost of publication for the poor privilege of buying these volumes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question on another point? I have examined the report to which he called my attention—the report submitted by the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the increase of clerical force in the State Department. I find that the amount allowed by law for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1882, was $117,880, for the force of the State Department generally; and there was an appropriation of $8,000 for extra clerk hire in that Department, making the cost of the whole force of the Department for the last fiscal year $125,880. I find upon an examination of this bill—I desire to know whether I am correct—that as it now stands agreed to in the conference committee, including the Senate amendments, there is appropriated for the State Department $129,550, making an increase for that Department, if my figures are correct, of $3,670.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's figures are correct.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report of the committee on conference, there were—ayes 50, noes 18.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that no quorum has voted, and I also call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I do not waive the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the call for the yeas and nays would waive that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we insist upon tellers, to which we are entitled as no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CANNON and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 55.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 15, noes 72; less than one-fifth in the affirmative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered; and the report of the conference committee was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I now move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 330 to 337, inclusive, and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. CANNON, Mr. HISCOCK, and Mr. ATKINS.

Mr. McCOID. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. That should go to the Committee on Claims, not Accounts. It relates to the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. McCOID. It refers to a payment out of the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. This the Chair understands to be a claim.

Mr. McCOID. It proposes to pay these men out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. URNER. It is for services rendered in the Forty-fourth Congress; and as we understand it, the Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction over the contingent fund except for the contingent expenses of the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a claim, and should be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM H. TILSON.

PRESIDENTIAL VETOES.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) to amend the Constitution of the United States, introduced to-day by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FLOWER,] be printed in the RECORD. It is short and important, and ought to be put in print.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the subject of the joint resolution?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is all right.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

A joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring,) That the following article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same is hereby, submitted to the several States for their ratification or rejection, and the same, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XIV.

Every bill, resolution, or vote containing several items of appropriations of money to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary, shall be presented to the President of the United States, who may object to one or more of such items while approving of the other parts of the bill, resolution, or vote. In such case he shall append to the bill, resolution, or vote a statement of the items to which he objects, and the appropriations so objected to shall not take effect unless reconsidered and passed by two-thirds of each House as provided in section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution. The items objected to shall be separately reconsidered in each House, and if on such reconsideration one or more of them shall be approved by two-thirds of each House the same shall become part of the law, notwithstanding the objection of the President.

BILLS OF LADING.

Mr. CHACE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6832) to make bills of lading negotiable; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEAL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being the fourth Monday of the month, immediately after the call of States and Territories business may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEAL. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. GARRISON.]

INSPECTION AND MEASUREMENT OF WOOD.

Mr. GARRISON. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 6723) to repeal all laws which require the inspection and measurement of wood brought to the city of Washington for sale be taken from the House Calendar and put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all laws which require that wood brought to the city of Washington for sale shall be subject to the inspection and measurement of wood inspectors or measurers, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or affect any law which requires that wood purchased for the use of the Government of the United States shall be first inspected and measured.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts.) The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. KLOTZ, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 2937) to extend time of payment of special assessments, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of June 29, 1879, be so amended that the time for payment on all special assessments and general taxes to January 1, 1879, under the provisions of said act, be extended to October 1, 1882.

SEC. 2. That the drawbacks due upon special assessments unrevised at the time of payment, but since revised and corrected, shall be issued to such parties as they are due under the provisions of said act, and receivable in payment of all general taxes to October 1, 1882, and for all special assessments.

SEC. 3. That all persons who did work under permits, whether under the board of public works or District commissioners, shall receive two-thirds compensation for the character of work done, when the item is not charged in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is. The Clerk will read the report.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The committee recommend the passage of the bill amended, as follows:

First. By striking out the first and third sections.

Second. By striking out the word "October," in line 5 of the second section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "January;" and by striking out of lines 5 and 6 in the same section "1882" and inserting in lieu thereof "1879."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be read as proposed to be amended. It is very important to know what is the effect of these amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the drawbacks upon special assessments unrevised at the time of payment but since revised and corrected shall be issued to such parties as they are due under the provisions of said act, and receivable in payment of all general taxes to January 1, 1879, and for all special assessments.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania or some one else explain the nature of this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it in relation to political assessments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. Would it be in order to move an amendment to the amendment of the committee? I propose to amend the amendment, so as to have a proviso that all license taxes on commercial travelers shall be repealed.

Mr. BAYNE. That is right; that ought to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to know whether the gentleman from New York proposed an amendment to one of the committee's amendments or an additional section?

Mr. COX, of New York. I would prefer having an additional section, but I am afraid I may lose my grip.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks he will endeavor to keep the gentleman from New York in his proper place. The question is on the amendments of the committee. If no separate vote is demanded the question will be taken on the amendments together.

There was no objection; and the question being taken on the amendments of the committee, they were agreed to.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. COX, of New York, as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"That all license taxes on commercial travelers, so called, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. NEAL. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, I will do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires the gentleman from Ohio to state what is his point of order.

Mr. NEAL. It is that the amendment is not germane to this bill; and it does not retrench expenditure, but on the contrary it increases expenditure.

Mr. COX, of New York. This is not an appropriation bill. It has to do with taxation. This amendment is absolutely and perfectly in order.

Mr. NEAL. It certainly is not an appropriation bill. It simply authorizes the issuing of drawbacks for some over-paid taxes. That is all there is of it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Before the Chair decides on the question of order I would like to have the privilege of making one statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have already said what I wanted to say on the point of order. There is more merit in this thing than the point of order would develop.

Mr. NEAL. I object to any remarks except on the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am speaking to the Chair.

Mr. NEAL. I am objecting to what you are addressing to the Chair if it be not on the point of order.

Mr. URNER. I would like to say one word on the point of order. I favor the proposition of the gentleman from New York as an independent proposition, but I do not think it is in order upon this bill. I do not think it is germane. The object of the bill, as I understand it, is this: under the District government certain improvements were ordered to be made upon the streets of the city. Assessments were made on the property-owners whose properties abutted on the streets improved. After this there was a revision of this assessment order. When the revision was made, in many instances the assessment was wiped out, in some instances cut down one-half, and in other instances cut down in various other proportions. Some of the parties whose property had been assessed for these improvements, paid their assessments before the revision was made. It is now proposed by this bill that those persons who paid their assessments before the revision was made shall receive drawback certificates for the difference between what they paid and that which they would have been required to pay if they had waited until the revision. That is all there is in it, and it seems to be a meritorious proposition.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to modify my amendment so as to make it applicable only to the District of Columbia, and to connect itself thereby with this bill, inasmuch as the bill connects itself with taxation in the District.

There is no other way by which the people of this country can be relieved of these local taxes in this District, except by a bill of this nature. My friend from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] as I hope, does not propose to press to-day his general tax bill for the District. He did press it at one time here, and failed because of something in the bill in reference to taxing the property of religious institutions, and also in reference to the taxes on these very commercial travelers. I say to this House that there are over 100,000——

Mr. NEAL. I object to the gentleman discussing the merits of this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire to speak on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SKINNER. The bill now under consideration proposes a drawback on certain taxes already paid. That certainly relates to the matter of assessments and taxation. It seems very clear to me that any matter which relates to assessments and taxation, not only of the residents of this District but the residents of other portions of the country who come into this District, should be regarded as entirely in order. Both of them relate to the same subject. It may be said that both of them relate to drawbacks, the one to drawbacks on people who have paid taxes, and the other to drawbacks on people who are unjustly taxed.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like any gentleman to point out what rule there is that excludes this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I am unable to find any rule that excludes this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The simple question is whether this proposition is germane to the subject-matter of the bill. Of course the ordinary clause of the rule referring to appropriation bills is not applicable to this question.

Mr. BAYNE. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It therefore comes under the general principles of parliamentary law.

Mr. BAYNE. Is there a rule of this House that requires that propositions to amend must be germane to the bill under consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is; the overrunning principle governing all parliamentary proceedings.

Mr. BAYNE. I submit to the Chair whether or not, under the existing rules of this House, we may not make what is known in many States as an omnibus bill; a conglomeration of different provisions relating to entirely different subjects, but every one of them within the rules, so far as we have any rules here in the House. The point of order as to whether or not a proposition is germane to a bill is applicable only to appropriation bills. I think it is the duty of the gentleman who raises the point of order to point out affirmatively that provision of law or that rule of the House which precludes this amendment to this bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has concluded his remarks.

Mr. BAYNE. I am done.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he is opposed to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] as a proposition?

Mr. NEAL. I am opposed to it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Otherwise, I suppose the point of order might be withdrawn. I myself favor the proposition.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. It does not seem to be in order for me to say whether I am for or against the proposition. I might have made a point of order on this colloquy which has just taken place, but I did not; I might have objected to the remark of my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] having been put upon record. It having been put upon record, I think I am entirely right in saying to the House that the most outrageous proceeding connected with this Government is this tax of $200——

Mr. NEAL. I must insist upon the gentleman confining himself to the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know that this gentleman makes that point on me, and yet he evaded the point of order by saying that he was opposed to my amendment.

Mr. NEAL. I answered in a gentlemanly manner a question which was asked of me in a gentlemanly manner. If the gentleman from New York will ask such a question I will answer it.

Mr. COX, of New York. If the gentleman is not in favor of the proposition all that I ask is a vote on it in the House. The people are taxed $200——

Mr. NEAL. I object to the gentleman debating the merits of the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to pass upon the point of order if the gentleman from New York will withhold his remarks.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is no other way in which we can get this matter before the people or the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes the general principle which he intimated in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE,] that propositions offered by way of amendment must be germane, is very clear. As showing that the House intended to include this principle in the rules, the Clerk will read clause 7 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without intimating anything as to the merits of the proposition, the Chair is very clearly of the opinion that the amendment presents a different subject-matter from that of the pending bill. The bill relates to drawbacks in connection with special assessments concerning improvements upon real property; it does not refer to any general method of assessing taxation in the District. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NEAL. As the first section of the bill has been struck out, it is necessary to make a verbal amendment in the second section. I move to amend by striking out the words "said act" and inserting "the act of June 29, 1879."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill how many of these drawback certificates it is expected there will be, or the amount which will be involved?

Mr. NEAL. I understand there are only two or three parties.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to know the amount involved; I do not care about the number of the parties.

Mr. MORSE. It is very important we should know the amount.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly; before we pass a bill of this kind we should have some information as to the amount involved. These drawback certificates are to be receivable for taxes. In the adjustment of the expenses of the District between the District of Columbia and the United States a certain amount is alloted to the District to be raised by taxation and a certain amount to the United States. Hence I think it due to the House that the Committee on the District of Columbia should inform us how much money is involved in this bill; what amount of taxes may be paid by the certificates to be issued under this very innocent-looking measure.

In connection with another bill with which I have had something to do, an investigation developed the fact that while Congress had appropriated a certain amount from the Treasury to defray the Government's proportion of the expenses of the District, the turning in of certificates of this kind in the payment of taxes reduced to such an extent the amount expected to be raised by District taxation that there was, I think, a deficiency of $150,000. An examination of the question developed the fact, I believe, that these drawback certificates had been issued to the amount of something over a million dollars. Disinterested gentlemen who have examined this subject have assured me that they think the law was stretched almost if not quite to the breaking in the allowance of three-quarters of a million of the drawbacks already allowed. While knowing very little about this bill, I suggest that the gentleman in charge of it ought to be able to state the amount of money that is involved.

Mr. KLOTZ. This bill only undertakes to refund taxes which were erroneously paid in consequence of overassessment, as is conceded, I believe, by the District authorities. An abatement of these excessive assessments was allowed to those who did not come forward and pay the taxes as assessed; and now these men who promptly paid their taxes before the revision was made ask simply that the amount overpaid may be refunded to them. The District commissioners have agreed that this demand is right. They concede that there was an overassessment; and no matter what the amount may be, this overpayment should be refunded. The amount is not large. The gentleman from New York is mistaken when he speaks of $150,000.

Mr. BAYNE. How much do these overpayments amount to?

Mr. KLOTZ. I do not know; but no matter what the amount may be, the excessive payments should be refunded. These men paid more than they ought to have been required to pay, as was shown by the revision; and we should not now refuse to authorize a refund.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been communicated to me that there is a great deal of anxiety to procure in some way a legislative indorsement or recognition of certain drawback certificates which have been issued and which it is believed have not yet been sanctioned by Congress. In the deficiency bill now pending between the two Houses we were compelled to insert an item of $50,000 because the amount which should have been raised by the District of Columbia for the payment of its share of the expenses of the District government was not raised, by reason of the receipt of these certificates. As I have stated, our investigation developed the fact that the deficiency of this character amounted to over $150,000—reached nearly $200,000. It was in this connection that a gentleman of the very highest character, thoroughly conversant with District of Columbia matters, suggested that we needed to be very careful that we did not give legislative sanction to these certificates.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is a very strange thing that the gentleman who has charge of this bill cannot give us the amount of this rebate.

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ] has charge of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is equally unfortunate with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.] When he was asked the question as to the amount involved in this remission of taxes he said he did not know. Now, suppose some one should ask the chairman of our Committee on Appropriations how much money would be expended by reason of an item in an appropriation bill and he should not be able to answer, I should be ashamed of my chairman as I am ashamed of members who bring in a bill of this nature. And yet this same gentleman undertook here to cut down by a point of order a decent and fair reform of the infamous tax system of this city by which goods are raised in price to all our own folks and families who live in this city, in protest of which I have telegrams from merchants all over the country; a tax system which will not allow people to come here and sell goods from abroad unless they get a license of $200, which license, as I can show, is peddled around this town by the people who get the license. We cannot get a reform on that. No wonder there is prejudice in this House against the District.

The gentlemen say, why not move an amendment? I have moved it as an amendment. I will say to my friend who understands the District of Columbia business that the point was made against it by the gentlemen on the other side, and it was ruled out of order. We did not appeal from the decision of the Chair. Why? Because the Chair, I imagine, has the respect of the House in the majority, and although he may in some sense be wrong in this ruling, as I believe he is, nevertheless I have the right now to argue the point in connection with this rambling, shambling sort of a bill. [Laughter.] I never saw a bill brought here so inconsiderately, and if we were in the House I would move to lay it on the table.

Mr. NEAL. We are in the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. KLOTZ. Before that is done I wish to say a word.

Mr. COX, of New York. The motion to lay upon the table is not debatable. I can make the point of order as well as gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The motion of Mr. COX, of New York, was agreed to; and the bill was laid on the table.

DANIEL DONOVAN.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back House bill No. 5614, for payment to Daniel Donovan for additional labor and services rendered the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,200 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Daniel Donovan for additional labor and services rendered the District of Columbia: Provided, That this sum shall be in full compensation for all such labor and services.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the point of order that that bill must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It seems that this bill was referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed. The Chair does not know about that.

Mr. URNER. The bill was inadvertently referred, as I understand, by the gentleman from Mississippi to the Committee on Accounts. It is a bill which provides payment to a party in the District of Columbia for extraordinary services as an expert in a certain case of Strong vs. The District Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has it been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. URNER. I understand it is not necessary it should be referred to that committee. I was directed by that committee to report it to the House.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. How did that committee get jurisdiction of it?

Mr. NEAL. Under the rules of the House we have the right to report any bill relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Appropriation or any other?

Mr. NEAL. Anything referring to the District of Columbia.

Mr. URNER. If the rules are strictly enforced it might properly not be reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a bill in which the business men of the District of Columbia have shown a great deal of interest. The bill was mislaid, and we have searched in vain for it until recently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask for unanimous consent from the House. The bill, it appears, was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and that committee has jurisdiction over the matter. The Committee on the District of Columbia desire to present the bill on their own motion without reference to the House. Is there objection?

Mr. GODSHALK. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House.

CHRISTIAN RUPPERT, ETC.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to give effect to the act approved June 22, 1882, for the relief of Christian Ruppert and others. This has not been reported to the committee, and is originated by that committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the point of order on it.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1882, entitled "An act for the relief of Christian Ruppert, William F. Mattingly, and Christian Heurich, trustees," be, and the same are hereby, construed to authorize and direct the commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue to said trustees, or their heirs and assigns, a drawback certificate for the sum of $781.75, which drawback certificate shall be received in payment of all special assessments and for all general taxes due prior to July 1, 1877.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. SKINNER. I offer this amendment as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all license taxes on commercial travelers, so called, within the District of Columbia be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. URNER. I raise the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the pending proposition. I am thoroughly in favor of it as an independent proposition, but it has no business here on this bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I raise the point of order upon the bill generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maryland insist upon the point of order?

Mr. NEAL. I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York who submitted the amendment desire to be heard?

Mr. COX, of New York. Let me say that this is a drawback bill. According to the gentleman's own statement he was not authorized to report it. It was not referred to his committee. It was reported by the committee without authority of the House, and nothing was sent to the committee to warrant them in framing such a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to inquire what is the subject-matter of the original bill to which this joint resolution is supplementary?

Mr. URNER. The first section of the bill provides:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to refund to Christian Ruppert, William F. Mattingly, and Christian Heurich, trustees, of the District of Columbia, their heirs and assigns, drawback certificates to the amount of $781.56, erroneously collected from them on October 1, 1879, as taxes on certain land in the county of Washington assessed in the names of Juan Pizzini and E. P. Hickey, owing to an error of the tax clerk.

That section authorizes the commissioners to issue certain drawback certificates as stated in the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there anything in the other sections of the bill of a different character?

Mr. URNER. No, sir; it refers to the same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have made a point of order upon the whole bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is rather late to make the point of order upon the bill now. An amendment has been offered and passed upon.

Mr. COX, of New York. But I reserved the point of order when the amendment was offered, as the Chair will remember.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman made the point of order in time the Chair will of course hear him upon it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that, according to the announcement of the gentleman who reports this joint resolution, it was never referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and I make the point of order that no committee can report back something unless it is referred to them by the House. Such matters must originate in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The original proposition the Chair understands was before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the House passed a bill reported from the committee upon this subject. This is a joint resolution giving a construction to the bill which was reported from the committee, and of which the committee had jurisdiction.

Mr. COX, of New York. But the point of order that I make is this: even if it be the construction of another law which has been reported from that committee this joint resolution was never sent to the committee by the House, and the committee therefore has no jurisdiction over the matter. It passed from its possession when the bill was reported and acted upon by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that if the subject-matter is before the committee——

Mr. COX, of New York. But it was disposed of.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. That it is still before them.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair hold that the amendment of the gentleman from New York covering the taxes levied under authority of the District of Columbia would be germane to a bill levying taxes in this District? Because if that be so the second section of this bill does levy taxes upon certain property.

Mr. NEAL. That bill is not before the House at all. It has become a law. This is a different matter.

Mr. COX, of New York. But this is giving a construction to that law. The Chair was not advised of that fact when it ruled upon the first point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maryland state what the provisions of the second section of this bill are?

Mr. URNER. I will explain further. The facts of the case are these: this party as trustee went to the tax clerk to pay the taxes. The tax clerk gave the bill of taxes due against his property, but he added to it, it was discovered afterward, other property, having made an error in preparing the tax bill by including in it taxes due upon other persons' property. Now it is proposed by the bill already passed that a draw back certificate shall be issued to these trustees for the amount of tax paid in error, and the second section requires the commissioners of the District of Columbia to proceed and collect the tax erroneously assessed upon another man's property. That is all it does. It is simply a private bill, and has no reference to the general tax laws of the District.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask a question. Was this erroneous tax, or improperly levied tax, a special assessment upon this property?

Mr. URNER. No, sir; it was a general tax.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I would like to inquire whether or not the tax has been paid twice?

Mr. URNER. No, sir.

Mr. NEAL. But the lots are still held for the tax under the law.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The parties who should have paid the tax have not done so?

Mr. URNER. No, sir; and the second section of the bill makes provision for its collection.

Mr. ROBESON. This section of the bill provides for levying and collecting a tax upon certain property.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to read this second section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to know whether it bears upon the question before the House. The Chair would like to dispose of the question of order first.

Mr. KENNA. I would like to be heard for a moment upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be recognized in a moment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire now to call the attention of the Chair to this second section. It provides for levying a tax upon the property in question. It therefore embraces the question of taxes. It directs the commissioners of the District of Columbia—

To charge said property with the said taxes, interest, and penalties, to the same extent, and to like effect, as if the said taxes had not been paid by said trustees.

This second section, therefore, looks to the assessment and collection of taxes; and I hold—and the Chair can still reverse his opinion of it if he chooses—that the amendment offered by my colleague as to another class of taxes or license is perfectly in order; and I would like to have the Chair look at this second section and rule accordingly.

Mr. KENNA rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from West Virginia upon the point of order.

Mr. KENNA. I have no desire to obstruct this bill, because I do not know anything about it. It may be a very meritorious proposition. But on the question whether it is before the House or not, if I can have the attention of the Chair for a moment, I desire to submit some observations. As I understand the facts, a bill was introduced into the House, referred to the committee, considered by the committee, reported to the House, passed the House, passed the Senate, and became a law. Whether that be correct or not, at any rate it passed the House.

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman's statement is correct; it has become a law.

Mr. KENNA. The original bill covering this proposition, and of which this resolution is explanatory, has gone beyond the reach of both Houses and has become law. It is the law that this resolution, as I understand, seeks to explain and to interpret.

Now, I submit as a matter concerning methods of legislation that a resolution looking to the correction or change of a law like any other original law must originate in this House and not in one of its committees. The practice in this House has been, even in cases where it was sought to correct the enrollment of bills after they have passed both Houses and gone to the Committee on Enrollments, to require the formal introduction into the House in which the bill originated of a resolution explanatory or making the necessary correction. And in no instance that I am aware of has a bill to repeal, amend, or explain a law been allowed to originate with a committee. The introduction of such a practice would entirely upset the whole methods of procedure.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to ask the Chair this question, whether or not anything that would be germane to the original law which this resolution proposes to explain or modify would not be germane to this resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will pass upon that question when it arises.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No amendment is at present in order. The question is made upon the right of the committee to present this joint resolution.

Mr. NEAL. If the Speaker will look at the resolution under which this day is set apart for business of the District Committee, it seems to me there can be no question about it. I want to say a word in reply to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] said about the point of order; and, incidentally, I will remark, if my recollection serves me, he said he was ashamed of the chairman of the committee because he came in here ignorant of certain facts which he ought to know. Now, I will say the Committee on Ways and Means cannot tell when they report a tax bill here what amount of taxes is to be raised from particular sources. And we cannot tell when we report a bill for the issuing of drawbacks just the amount to be issued. Nobody in the world can tell it.

Mr. COX, of New York. But you did not even approximate to the amount.

Mr. NEAL. While the gentleman from New York may be ashamed of me for being ignorant of what nobody could know, let me say I am ashamed of him because he comes here—after being a member of the House for a period beyond which the memory of man runneth not—because he comes here and shows he does not know what the rules are.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rather guess that is personal. [Laughter.] I did not make use of the remark that I was ashamed of the gentleman from Ohio. I said I would be ashamed of my chairman if he could not answer proper questions on a bill he had reported.

Mr. NEAL. You said more than that.

Mr. COX, of New York. Very likely I did. And now the gentleman comes and undertakes to make a personal point on me. He brings in a bill as to a drawback connected with taxation, and you cannot tell from his statement whether it is $10,000 or $1,000,000. The committee which ought to instruct this House, the committee specially charged with this kind of business, does not know the responsibility which the Government may incur or which the taxpayers will incur or be relieved from by the bill, and I say the gentleman from Ohio is the last man, with this great pall of ignorance around him, to lecture any man. He makes a little cuttle-fish arrangement here with himself, and throws the ink all around him as if we could not see he is entirely ignorant of the very bill which he and the gentleman from Pennsylvania try to champion.

Mr. NEAL. And you try to put on a private bill a matter of a general nature, which is not germane; which your experience in this House ought to have taught you is not according to the rules, and which your reputation as a parliamentarian ought to have made you ashamed to propose.

Mr. COX, of New York. Any lecture from any gentleman from Ohio of course I will most cheerfully take. [Laughter.] I am from Ohio myself, in early days; but I have grown beyond some men from Ohio in experience. I will not be particular to name them; very likely they will never be heard of again in public life, because they gave up to the District what was meant for mankind.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] in refusing time and again to reform the vicious tax system of this District, because his first bill was a tax on religious associations and on these commercial travelers, failed in his duty. And now he and his colleagues on the committee make a little point of order on us when we try to have some liberality in trade in this District.

Sir, they are not the men to scold gentlemen who are here representing their districts; they are the last men who can be said to be here trying to benefit this District, because they are seeking to make the government of the District odious with all men who care about fair trade in this District.

Although it is not strictly on the point of order, I desire to say that people cannot come here, and live, and purchase ordinary articles of merchandise except at an enormous advance and at higher prices than they can be bought elsewhere, because of the very dereliction of these men who represent the District here in this House. They themselves are a burden and a tax on the community, and they ought to be repealed or laid on the table or under the table. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman from New York, who professes to take such an interest in the affairs of this District, is the very last man who has proposed any beneficial legislation for the District. He wants to impose burdens on the merchants of this District, in order that a few drummers from the city of New York may come here and forage on this District.

Mr. COX, of New York. There are thousands in New York of what the gentleman calls drummers, and drumming is just as honorable in trade as it is in politics.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask if this is District of Columbia day or Ohio day? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. A little of both, and New York also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to pass upon the point of order; he thinks the debate is drifting somewhat away from the point of order.

The Chair finds that in addition to the bill referred to there is also a bill upon the Calendar for the relief of Christian Ruppert and others, trustees, still pending before the House, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Chair therefore thinks he could not exclude this joint resolution from the consideration of the House on the point made.

Upon the other point of order which has been made, that a general provision in relation to taxation may not be incorporated in this joint resolution, the Chair desires to restate his position and to reaffirm his former decision. The Chair does not find in the pending proposition anything referring generally to assessments and taxation. And, further, it is a well-established rule of parliamentary law that it is not in order to ingraft upon a private bill a general provision of law. The Chair, therefore, is confident that his former ruling was correct.

Mr. BAYNE. I propose an amendment in the way of an additional section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all license taxes on commercial travelers within the District be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and the said taxes paid, if any, during the year 1882, shall be refunded.

Mr. NEAL. I make a point of order on that amendment. It is not only not germane to the joint resolution but it is an attempt to ingraft general legislation upon a private bill.

Mr. BAYNE. It is not general legislation.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, it is general legislation.

Mr. BAYNE. It is intended to relieve a class of people who have been imposed upon in this District during the year 1882; those who have paid their $200, and those who have succeeded in compromising for $100, as I understand has been the case in some instances.

Mr. NEAL. I insist that the gentleman must speak upon the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I am speaking on the point of order.

Mr. NEAL. No, you are not, unless you change your tone or words.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not propose to change my tone or my words. I propose to call things by their right names.

I say it is a proposition to refund to men who have during the year 1882 paid the license tax of $200 and those who, as I understand, have compromised for $100 the amount of money they have paid. It is special, therefore, in its nature as to them. I submit that it is perfectly germane and in keeping with the pending proposition to refund to certain other persons the amounts of money they have paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no difficulty with the point of order, and sustains it upon the grounds before given, that the amendment proposes a general repeal, which the Chair thinks is not in order on the pending proposition. The question now is upon ordering the joint resolution as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken, and the House refused to order the joint resolution to be engrossed.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the joint resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. I desire to make a statement. I had proposed, if we had been allowed as much time to-day as we expected, to have brought before the House a bill embracing a comprehensive system of District taxation, in connection with which the questions arising about this license tax could have been thoroughly discussed and considered. The committee has never been able to bring a measure of that kind before the House since the general tax bill was voted down upon a motion to suspend the rules. I have here a letter from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asking me to postpone the consideration of the tax measure until his return, he having been called away suddenly by the sickness of his brother.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn if the gentleman will bring in a bill to which we can make a germane amendment as to these commercial travelers.

Mr. NEAL. I hope the gentleman from New York will listen to my statement.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does the gentleman refer to the long tax bill?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX, of New York. We can never get through with that.

Mr. NEAL. We cannot do it to-day. But as I was saying, I have a letter from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, especially requesting me to postpone the consideration of this tax measure until his return. The District Committee cannot of course have another day unless the House will set it apart by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAZELTON. There is no time left now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio bring forward any other District of Columbia bill?

Mr. NEAL. It is too late now to consider any other measure of any moment.

DETROIT HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit house of correction, in the State of Michigan.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas an internal-revenue tax was assessed against and collected from the Detroit house of correction, an institution belonging to the State of Michigan, during the years A. D. 1863 to 1868, inclusive, amounting to about the sum of $16,566.20; and

Whereas said institution was during said time, and still is, exempt from such taxation; and

Whereas the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized, on appeal made, to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed and collected; and

Whereas application has been heretofore made for the refunding of said tax, and by inadvertence the said application was denied; and

Whereas, under the rules adopted and in force in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that he cannot reopen and review said decision, inasmuch as it was made by his predecessor in office: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reopen and reconsider any determination or decision heretofore made by his predecessors in office rejecting the application of the said Detroit house of correction for the refunding of internal-revenue taxes heretofore assessed against and collected from said Detroit house of correction, and if, in his opinion, said taxes should be refunded, to refund the same; and the money therefor hereby is appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. LORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT RICHARDSON.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk, and that it be now considered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Robert Richardson for services as messenger in the Clerk's office, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, the difference between the pay of a laborer, received by him, and that of a messenger, from the 23d day of January, 1876, to the 13th day of October, 1877, $826.29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BROWNE. Has it been before the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It was referred to the Committee on Claims and favorably reported.

Mr. SKINNER. I object.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the report be read there will be no objection. The committee was unanimous.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] will withdraw his objection to this resolution. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. McMILLIN that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials and petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BERRY: The petition of citizens of California, protesting against the enlargement of the Yosemite reservation in the State of California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Memorial of the mayor and council of Marietta, Georgia, for an appropriation for the improvement of the highway leading to the National Cemetery near that city—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DEERING: The petition of the Iowa State board of health, for an appropriation for the maintenance of the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DUNN: Memorial of the board of trade of the city of Van Buren, Arkansas, for the passage of a bill authorizing the Cherokee Railway and Telegraph Company to construct and operate a line from Kansas City, Kansas, to a point at or near Fort Smith, Arkansas—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RUSSELL: The petition of Charles W. Williams and others, of Lowell, Massachusetts, for the enactment of a general bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONAS. I present a petition of steamboat owners, captains, and pilots on the Mississippi River, praying for an increase of the appropriation for the Light-House Board. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to be considered in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1174) to grant the right of way over the public lands and a military reservation to the Jacksonville, Saint Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company, reported it with an amendment.

NEW ORLEANS WATER-WORKS.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States, direct me to report it without amendment, and to recommend its passage. I ask for the present consideration of that bill in consequence of the urgency of the case, which I can explain in a moment if an explanation is desired.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It grants the right of way to Davidson B. Penn, of New Orleans, Louisiana, and his associates, under the name and style of the "Saint Tammany Water Works Company," or such other style as they may adopt, to lay conduits, pipes, arches, and aqueducts under the waters of Lake Pontchartrain to connect its northern shores with the city of New Orleans, and over and under any of the public waters or lands of the United States between New Orleans and the shore of the lake.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census. Its importance must be obvious to every Senator. We are near the close of the session, and the bill will have to go to the House and will probably come back with amendments.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Rhode Island proceeds with that request I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the amendment to the tax bill in regard to the rebate of the tobacco tax does not appear by the Journal to have been adopted. The question was not in fact put. Various amendments to that amendment were adopted, but on the amendment as amended the question was not put.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that the census bill be taken up.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to object to the Senator's request for unanimous consent, but I did not expect the bill to come up at this time. I have an important amendment that I wish to move. If I can get my amendment I shall give consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk has the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

Mr. ANTHONY. There was a mistake in the estimate, and the appropriation should be reduced to $678,624.61. I move that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To what extent does it reduce the appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. About $150,000. There was an error in the estimate, and it is reduced. I propose to strike out "$834,461.61" and insert "$678,624.61."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to inquire whom made the estimate; whether it was the Public Printer or the committee itself?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was made by the committee, the Public Printer, and the Superintendent of the Census. The mistake was made in the committee-room.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The object of my inquiry is not to oppose the printing of the census, for I think the appropriation ought to be made; but how was the specific amount obtained? In what way was it ascertained what the cost would be?

Mr. ANTHONY. In the usual way—by the number of pages, the composition, the paper, the stereotyping, and the binding; and a clerical error occurred in the figures as the report was printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the chairman a question. Some days ago there was some debate about the publication of the census, and suggestions were made that the printing might be curtailed so as not to publish all that had been prepared to be printed. Has anything of that kind been done?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Superintendent has been instructed, or has agreed in consultation with us—for we had no right to instruct him—to reduce the census reports from 18,000 to 15,000 pages. As the report of the committee states, there have been some investigations made under this census which are not strictly within the line of enumeration, but the information has been collected at considerable expense, it is interesting, and it seems a pity to throw away all that has been done because of the comparatively trifling cost of printing it. In the debate to which the Senator refers allusion was made to the history of New Orleans, with several engravings. That is a small paper of about one hundred pages, I believe.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to make the further inquiry whether the Superintendent of the Census himself determines everything in reference to what portion of the census reports shall be published? It seems to me there ought to be some persons charged with the examination of the matter prepared in the Census Office, so that there shall be some intelligent understanding as to what is to be published. I inquire whether the Superintendent of the Census determines that himself, or the Printing Committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course the Superintendent of the Census must determine it. My honorable friend has been a member, a very valuable member, of the Committee on Printing. I do not think if he was on that committee now he would undertake himself to go over 18,000 pages and decide what should be printed and what not. The committee of course can do nothing of that kind.

Mr. SAULSBURY. When I was a member of the Printing Committee, being in the minority, I had to follow the dictation and lead of my seniors, and I was always very happy to be led by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator from Rhode Island if it was not competent for the committee to expurgate some entire volumes from the material which has been gathered by the Census Bureau?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Kansas will go on the committee as an extra member and undertake the labor of reading through those volumes——

Mr. PLUMB. I think I could make a report off-hand on that subject which would satisfy me.

Mr. ANTHONY. What volume would the Senator expurgate?

Mr. PLUMB. I can say at least that the history of New Orleans was not very important to be published.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think it was precisely. If I can have the attention of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS,] I do not think the history of New Orleans came properly within the purview of the census, but it is a very interesting document and New Orleans is a very unique city. It has been under the control of three different governments, and the paper is exceedingly valuable, not perhaps as belonging properly to the census, but valuable for its historical and statistical information, and the cost of printing it is not very expensive now that the type has been set and it is stereotyped. It is only about one hundred pages, I believe.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to that, I think it is very expensive to publish now any volume which is not particularly germane to the work which has been undertaken by the Census Bureau, and it is expensive just in this way: we encourage the officers of the Executive Departments to put in type whatever they think ought to be published, and then we are under a stress to continue the publication because it does not cost much. They incur the greater part of the cost, but we should commence sitting down on them and determine what shall be printed. In regard to the history of New Orleans or in regard to the seals of Alaska it does not perhaps matter, but at all events the line ought to be drawn somewhere. I am in favor of leaving out three or four volumes which have been prepared under the officers of the Census Bureau and saying that those shall not be published, for the purpose of emphasizing the determination to put some limit upon the executive branch of the Government in regard to the matter prepared for printing and which is put in type in such a way, as I said, as to compel us to take it because it does not cost us much.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator propose to draw the line on the seals?

Mr. PLUMB. For the purpose of saving time I will draw it on all of them. I do not say that some of those volumes ought not to be published. It is a very interesting volume about New Orleans, I have no doubt, but much more interesting would be the exploration of Captain Pike in the territory we acquired under the Louisiana treaty and all the interesting questions which grew out of the question of boundary between the Spanish possessions, the French possessions, and the American possessions. So far as that matter goes, this country is full of questions of that kind which could be well published by somebody who had the enterprise and the cash to do it. The Government has more cash and more enterprise for that purpose, it seems. I submit that it is a travesty upon government and upon a census to have that bureau select out the history of individual cities and put it into volumes that are to be compiled and publish it as a part of the census literature of 1880 or of any other year. I think in Congress we ought to sit down upon it. We ought to do so for the purpose of emphasizing the determination that we shall have some kind of control over this class of expenditures. Upon the theory on which the Committee on Printing now proceeds the Secretary of the Treasury could publish a book of light literature if he so pleased; he could publish anything.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; he cannot publish anything beyond the limits assigned by the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations appropriates so much money to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and he cannot publish one cent beyond that unless he has the sanction of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. That is very true, but how easy to avoid that law by saying he will publish one of Emile Zola's novels instead of a report on his Department and use the money in that way.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator supposes the head of a Department is capable of doing that, then the Senator's opinion holds good, but I have some confidence in the heads of Departments.

Mr. PLUMB. I will admit that is an extravagant statement, but I submit that it will hardly be called extravagant when we consider what the Census Bureau have done. Why the history of New Orleans more than the history of Louisville, the "dark and bloody ground" made famous by the exploits of Daniel Boone?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to explain about the matter of the census, not to interrupt him?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on the Census looked into this matter pretty thoroughly. They found, for instance, this pamphlet or tract, or interesting paper, whatever you may call it, upon New Orleans became embodied as part of the census in this way: when General Walker, who was selected by common consent to be at the head of this great work, sat himself down to consider what should be the scope of the census he was beset in every direction from Senators and Members and from the Departments with suggestions for amplification of the work. Anybody who will go and see the records there, the letters he received, will find some of the difficulties under which General Walker labored. Everybody wanted it extended to his own particular region.

Finally it was decided by General Walker that a sketch of the history of events and the peculiarly distinguishing things that rally around certain cardinal points in the settlement of the country should be incorporated as part of the census, and New Orleans naturally fell into that classification. It is not to be confined, if allowed, to New Orleans, but other interesting points in all parts of the country, east, west, north, and south, were intended to be embodied in the census.

Of course the Senator knows, if he has examined it, that no comparison can very well be made between this census and any other. Everybody understood that it was to be enlarged very greatly. For instance, there are to be volumes upon the great mining industries of the country, that in their extent alone will be almost as great as has been covered heretofore by a complete census. The statistics upon manufactures, upon the cotton growth of the country alone, will make of volumes and matter and substance-matter equal or nearly equal to that published of any previous census.

So in amplifying this great work, one thing and another crept in, and General Walker, then superintendent, who had the main work upon his hands, was obliged to yield in many directions, and did yield. He has, as my friend knows, a bright and enthusiastic mind, he became an enthusiast in his subject, and undoubtedly many things have got into his plan of the work that were not strictly needed. It has been cut down from 18,000 pages to 15,000 pages.

I can say to my friend that on this matter of printing, which the Census Committee examined and then turned over to the Printing Committee, a great part of the difficulty has been obviated in this way: certain matter which is essential to the census, which he and I and everybody would say is essential, will be printed very largely. The compendium in two volumes will cover what almost everybody wants. There will have to be 150,000 or 200,000 copies of that issued; of other matter, 20,000 copies will do; of certain other things, 10,000 copies will do; there are some parts of it of which quite likely there will only need to be a small edition of 1,000 or 1,500 or 2,000 copies, for colleges and libraries and scientific men, and to be sent abroad. Quite likely the volume containing the sketches and history and early results of settlement in different parts of the country may be embodied in one volume and published in brief, so that the expense will not be great, and I believe the Committee on Printing can regulate that.

I make this explanation in justice to the Census Bureau, because it will be seen, if what I state is correct and has any impression, that the Superintendent, undoubtedly encouraged in making a great work and enthusiastic upon it, was beset in many ways, and all the counsel that he got in every direction, so far as I have seen from his records and the letters, was in direction of amplifying and spreading out this work. I believe the expense can be regulated very largely by the Senator from Rhode Island and his confrères upon the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the explanation still does not satisfy me. New Orleans is no more significant a place than some others.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will allow me to state that it is suggested by my friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] that as the result of our investigations in the Census Committee we did not find that this spreading out, this amplification, had ever been in a direction that was not valuable to a certain degree. There is no really superfluous or needless or extraneous matter that somebody or other would not find of value.

Mr. PLUMB. Everything in this world is comparative. The history of New Orleans, I have no doubt, is of some importance to the entire country, but it is no more so perhaps than the history of Saint Louis, no more so than the exploits of Marquette and La Salle.

Mr. HALE. All those are to be published.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I think it is time to draw the line. Those are of no more consequence than the history of the settlement of California; no more phenomenal thing ever occurred in the history of civilization than the settlement and growth of California. Next after it comes perhaps the history and growth of Leadville and the mineral discoveries in the vicinity. So we might go on multiplying. Congress did, I think, under the advice of the Superintendent of the Census, seek to limit the total expense of this census by restricting the total appropriation to be available for that purpose. We fixed that at $3,000,000, but we find that this expenditure constantly exceeds the limit set by Congressional authority, and it is contagious. I do not blame General Walker for it, because Congress goes on all the time to appropriate money for the expenses of the Executive Departments of the Government. General Walker was encouraged to go ahead and told practically to have the census embrace the history of various portions of the country; but it is time we put a stop to these things.

I insist it is proper that a stop should be put here; not merely because these matters are unnecessary as parts of the census, but because it is a good time to assert the intention of Congress to limit these expenditures which have heretofore been unlimited on the part of the executive branch of the Government. I therefore move to amend so that the publication of the census—if that is in order—in the text shall not exceed twenty volumes, to be selected by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I trust that it will not be assigned to the Committee on Printing. We are nearly at the close of the session; we cannot get together in the recess; and if we are to go through all those 18,000 pages of manuscript and decide what shall be printed we cannot satisfy the Senator from Kansas nor ourselves. If that duty is to be done by anybody it should be done by the Superintendent of the Census, who is a very accomplished scientific man, who devotes himself wholly to this work. It is not his intention to extend the work above 15,000 pages, and certainly he is the best judge, perhaps not of how many pages should be suppressed, but of what the suppressed pages should consist.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move the following amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As an amendment to the amendment or as a separate amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Then I will wait. My amendment relates to the mode of distribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the words "reports of the tenth census of the United States," in line 3, the following:

> Not exceeding twenty volumes in number, to be determined by the Superintendent of the Census in connection with the Committee on Printing of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that the Committee on Printing had better be omitted from that amendment. The Superintendent of the Census is fully capable and will conscientiously carry out any directions that Congress may give to him.

Mr. HOAR. What is the size of the volumes?

Mr. ANTHONY. One hundred pages or a thousand, just as he pleases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be read as prepared by him.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 3 of section 1, it is proposed to insert:

> Not exceeding 20 volumes in number, to be determined by the Superintendent of the Census.

Mr. INGALLS. That will be entirely inoperative unless there is some further limitation. If the policy of my colleague is to secure only the publication of a certain portion of the material that has been collected, then his amendment will be of no avail, because the Superintendent of the Census can make these volumes large or small, as he pleases; and I have no doubt that he will find some way to circumvent the will of Congress if he can find out what that will is.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why does the Senator from Kansas make that remark?

Mr. INGALLS. Because that is the inevitable tendency of all executive officers in all particulars.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator means to include the Superintendent of the Census in the general description of mankind, I shall not attempt a defense of him; but if the Senator means to charge him with any peculiar design to thwart the will of Congress, I shall have to object.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator wishes to say something, I will make that charge, to hear what he has to say about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to know what the Senator from Kansas has to say in support of that charge.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not the question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Kansas knows anything about the present Superintendent of the Census, whether he has had any acquaintance with his manner of work or his character. I know something about that, and in my opinion a man more laborious, more faithful, and more modest in every way than the Superintendent of the Census does not live here in Washington.

Neither is he a man who is inclined to force his own work on to Congress. I think he is an exception there to what is commonly the case, I admit, and I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that ordinarily the heads of bureaus are desirous of foisting their work upon Congress, and in many cases of finding ways to circumvent the limitations that we attempt to throw around them; but Colonel Seaton is a man who is not of that kind. He is a man who does not besiege Congress; he is a man who comes not before Congress or raps at the committee doors until he is sent for, and when he makes his plain, simple, unvarnished statement, and retires, that is the last that is heard of him until committees send for him again. I wish in that regard that other heads of bureaus here in Washington would emulate the Superintendent of the Census; and the Senator from Kansas, and the rest of us would be troubled much less than we are if they worked after his pattern.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, while the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was speaking, and while this discussion was going on, I have been hastily glancing over a list of the reports, to see what could be reasonably thrown out. I will call attention to a few of them, if the Senate desires to look into them, because this proposition is to print twenty volumes. It has been suggested already that that is a very indefinite term indeed. There are reports here as low as ten pages, others forty-sixty pages, others fifty pages. These things are given out to specialists. Twenty, forty, fifty of these reports can go in a volume. The word "volume" is indefinite, because it may mean four hundred pages, or it may mean twelve hundred pages. It will be very difficult to carry out the proposed amendment. What will you throw away? Here is a report on the statistics of the iron and steel production of one hundred and eighty pages. That is a magnificent industry. The report embodies a vast amount of statistics, and there is information there of great value to the country. I have not examined the report, but it is by a man whose life has been devoted to that business, and I think it is worth something. Then there is a report on the water-power of the South Atlantic coast. I do not know exactly whether that is essential or not, but there is a growing tendency toward manufactures on all that South Atlantic coast, and the water-power question is a very important one.

Mr. INGALLS. Perhaps that refers to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, it has nothing to do with the river and harbor bill; it is manufacturing water-power. There is another report on the statistics of the manufacture of silk. The silk manufacture has increased immensely as an industry in the country. I do not know why we should throw that out. There is a paper on the manufactures of the twenty largest cities of the United States, containing thirty-two pages. It is not large but it is valuable. Of course it is possible it might have been put in a condensed form in the general report. There is a report on the newspapers and periodicals of the United States. No country equals the United States in the number of newspapers and periodicals, &c., in proportion to the population, and the statistics of them are valuable. They are evidence of the civilization and progress of the people.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask right there if there is not published by particular firms in this country every one of the essential facts contained in that report and circulated free?

Mr. HAWLEY. I know the volumes to which the Senator refers, because they are sent to all of us engaged in the newspaper business, but they do not answer the purposes of the census. Their aim is to describe the facilities for advertising. That is what they are directly aimed at.

Mr. PLUMB. They give the circulation, politics, and name of each paper published.

Mr. HAWLEY. They do, in a measure; and you might say the whole census was unnecessary because you could go around picking up something about every branch of it probably. You can get a tolerable estimate of the population, for many of the cities take an account of their population, and so do many of the States. So you might dispense with the whole census on that theory.

Mr. PLUMB. Newspaper people know all about it and publish it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Here is a report on the growth of the cereal crops of the United States, which is certainly valuable, and another on the meat production of the country, which has grown into very great importance in a few years and resulted in the exportation of immense quantities. I should like to know something about that, and it is very convenient to refer to occasionally.

Here is another report on the tobacco culture of the United States, and here is a report on the whale fisheries of the United States and a report on the quarries of Ohio and Kentucky, but that is only ten pages. There are other reports on quarries. That seems to have been a special report. Then there is Robert P. Porter's report on the state of municipal taxation and valuation. That is valuable. Then there is Robert P. Porter's report on the railroad statistics of the United States. That is valuable. Did I mention the tobacco culture, because there is a valuable report, an excellent report, on that? Then there is a report on forestry and the lumbering industry; a report on the cotton manufacture; a report on the woolen manufacture; reports on the manufacture of glass and of coke and on wages in manufacturing industries; a report on fire and marine insurance; a report on the production, transportation, and manufacture of petroleum; Special Agent King's report on the mining of the precious metals, mining industry, laws, regulations, &c.; report on the useful metals in mining industry, &c.; report on the water-power of the regions not previously mentioned, and on the machinery employed in the manufacture of textile fabrics, boots, shoes, &c.; report on the manufacture of machine tools; report on the social statistics of cities; report on pauperism and crimes and on the afflicted classes, namely, the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic. Then certain reports on statistics relating to the ages of living inhabitants, deaths and the causes of death, and to life insurance—vital statistics as they are generally called—under the care of Lieutenant-Colonel John S. Billings, surgeon United States Army, a gentleman well known, whose authority is excellent.

It is difficult, in running these over and seeing that these reports run from ten pages to five hundred pages, to say just what to strike out. I will mention some about which there might be an inquiry or a doubt. The report on flour milling and milling machinery is estimated at twenty pages. I put a query against that. There is not much of it, but it is of some value. I made a query against another report, that "on the water-power of the Missouri River and its tributaries." You may say of that as of the similar report as to the South Atlantic coast, that the statistics are valuable.

I will not detain the Senate; but you see when you come to look over the list and find that these reports run from ten pages up and really all refer to subjects of importance and illustrate the growth and power of the country, that it is a very difficult thing for anybody to say that they shall all come within twenty volumes and say what shall go within twenty volumes of 5,000 pages, and what shall not go in. We did require the Superintendent to reduce his aggregate from 18,000 to 15,000 pages, and then we want to correct the evils partially, in some degree to obviate the difficulties that the Senator from Kansas has in mind by providing that certain volumes only should be published in certain limited numbers, and that the general compendium should be published in one good large volume rather than in two as the original purpose was, because the work would be likely to be separated in distribution and be an eternal vexation. It is better that the compendium should be all in one volume, and so we required that that should be condensed. I prefer the bill in the form reported by our committee, for I gave my assent to it there after considerable consideration, and if any further great or serious condensation is contemplated it had better be a matter of deliberate consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. For that purpose I desire to get the sense of the Senate on the question of limiting the work. I am aware that under my amendment the privilege may be abused, and as my colleague suggests the Superintendent can publish such volumes as he chooses, but I want the sense of the Senate on the question of limiting the publication. For the purpose of making it effective I will object to the further consideration of the bill, if that is in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not in order. The bill has been taken up and is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been taken up unanimously.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the recollection of the Senator from Kansas to one fact. A point has been made as to the natural inclination of the Superintendent of the Census to magnify his own work. The Superintendent of the Census who is responsible for the scope and scheme of this census, and for everything that is embraced in it, has gone out of office, General Walker, who has become the head of the great ethnological school in Boston, and his successor is now in office, so that the power will be left as the bill leaves it, in a person who comes with entire impartiality to the consideration of the question how much shall be published.

Mr. PLUMB. I think so myself. I would be willing to leave it absolutely to the discretion of the Superintendent of the Census. And in regard to the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut in relation to this matter, I do not desire to blame General Walker or Mr. Seaton, but an abuse has crept in which ought to be stopped, and I think this is a good place to stop at. Take the subjects treated of as read by the Senator from Connecticut; they are valuable, but what ought to be considered if we go into that class of subjects? Take the culture of tobacco; what does it compare with the statistics of the production of corn, wheat, cattle, hogs, and things of that kind?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are all in.

Mr. PLUMB. Why should there be a special treatise on tobacco and not on some other product? We ought to have a thousand volumes if we go on in that way. We are here magnifying certain products of the country and certain localities, as New Orleans, the South Atlantic coast, and the Missouri River. That only shows how much we ought to have if we are to have a census going into those subjects at all. There is where the abuse lies. There is enough to show the total inapplicability of what they have done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not refer to corn because I took it for granted everybody must know there was something about corn and wheat. I did not name Special Agent Brewer's report on the cereal crops of the United States, estimated at four hundred pages.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask either Senator why these spasms of economy should touch first the educational report, one of the most valuable and interesting that is made, and second the census report, more valuable still? Why not touch a thing like that [exhibiting a volume] laid on my desk this morning, bound in calf, with my name printed on it, "Report of the Chief of Ordnance," which I shall never look into in my life, which no Senator will ever examine, which no human being will ever read, which is only valuable to put into a few libraries, and must cost thousands of dollars in the way of distributing? Why not let the spasm of economy strike the messages and documents? My recollection is that we get seventy or eighty a piece of them every year.

Mr. ANTHONY. Only about fourteen.

Mr. FRYE. When I was in the House there were sixty or seventy of them.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the abridgment in a single volume.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to know what earthly use that abridgment is? Nobody wants it. You cannot find a man in the country who wants it. I never know where to send it, but I do know wherever I send it, in all human probability in less than three months it will be in a junk-shop, sold for two cents a pound.

Why does not the Printing Committee or somebody just take and print all that is necessary of documents that are of use and stop this printing and binding of documents that are of no earthly use to anybody? I am sure the census report must be of infinite value all over the country.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think if that duty is to be assigned to "the Committee on Printing or somebody," it had better be assigned to "somebody." These documents are printed by statute, and the abridgment of the message and documents is an exceedingly valuable publication. The message and documents are sent to Congress. They are of no use unless they are printed. A Senator or Representative cannot go through a thousand pages of manuscript to be passed from hand to hand, and although the whole of it is not useful to any one man, every part of it is useful to some man. I think no Senator or the Committee on Military Affairs will pronounce the report of the Chief of Ordnance useless.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me say that if the Senator from Maine does not want his copies I shall be glad to take half a dozen, for I have large arms manufacturing concerns about me that would be glad to get them.

Mr. FRYE. I shall be glad to give them all to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Thank you.

Mr. ANTHONY. These documents are "the ledgers of the realm;" they are the history of the country for the last year, and the reports are prepared with great care, great industry, and great expense, and they must be printed for the use of Congress at any rate; and to print a few more copies involves a comparatively small cost. I think the number that we receive of the unabridged message and documents is fourteen, and I certainly could distribute in my little State three times that number to profit and advantage.

I think, Mr. President, that this compression of the reports, whatever is decided upon, should be left to the Superintendent of the Census. I am quite sure that he will attempt to carry out, not to circumvent, the will of Congress in the matter. I believe the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has relieved the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Printing is not named in the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. The question is on that amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let it be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 3, after "census," it is proposed to insert:

Not exceeding 20 volumes in number, to be determined by the Superintendent of the Census.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. Now I move to amend the bill by inserting, after line 34, the following:

That in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document rooms of the Department of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress as follows: In sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Senator, and to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate, and in volumes to such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the quota of each shall be exhausted: Provided, That one copy of each volume shall, on its reception from the Public Printing Office, be transmitted to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress: And provided further, That the party receiving the work upon the order of a member of Congress shall be informed by the Secretary of the Interior upon whose request it is supplied. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the names and locations of the libraries and other public institutions designated to receive these reports under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, if the Senate will observe this amendment, they will see that it does not in the least change the existing right or privilege of any Senator or Representative, unless he so elects, except so far as it requires the supply out of this large number of copies of a certain number of libraries. If there is not that number of libraries in any State, then all the remainder is to be distributed to such persons as the Senator or Representative shall direct. If he chooses he may direct the whole to be sent to his own room as now, and distribute them by franking them himself; but if he does not choose to do that, then the Secretary of the Interior sends them to such persons as the Senator or Representative shall direct, keeping a record and notifying the person that it is sent at the request of the particular Senator or Representative who sent in his name. That accomplishes several very important objects. In the first place it prevents the duplicating of these sets to various individuals, because if the Representative from a district and a Senator from the State and his colleague have named the same person, they would receive notice simply that this person they had named had been supplied by another member of Congress.

Now, I will venture to say that of the number of public documents which are printed for public distribution nine-tenths are totally wasted, certainly more than half; a large majority is totally wasted. We have a law under which the executive documents as they are called are distributed by the Department of the Interior to certain persons who are named; and the Department of the Interior has a certain other number which it distributes at its discretion; but in regard to all the documents like the census reports, like Major Powell's wonderful report on ethnology, like the Medical and Surgical History of the War, there is no provision whatever by which these documents go into any one place, or by which even the different volumes of the same documents go to the same place. There is an old law by which the Librarian of Congress has fifty copies to send to certain enumerated foreign governments, and a large number of those foreign governments have gone out of existence. A lot of little German states that were swallowed up in the German Empire are still entitled by law to have a copy sent them by the Librarian of Congress. It is the duty of Mr. Spofford to send a copy to the state department of Sardinia, a nationality which has long since been merged in the Kingdom of Italy. In fact there is no place in this country where we deposit by law these valuable and important documents published under the direction of any Department of the Government, except those which are called legislative or executive documents sent to Congress, which are distributed by law.

I do not see the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] in his seat, but I will venture to say that he does not know where his eminent predecessor, General Burnside, sent the volumes which have been so far published of the Medical and Surgical History of the War. He has got to guess who are the persons. The membership of the other House is constantly changing. There may have been in some districts four or five different members in succession while the publication of the Medical and Surgical History of the War has been going on, which, taking the cost of the original returns and adding the expense of editing, will cost the Government $125 a set, and taking the actual cost of printing, binding, and engraving, cost the Government fifty or sixty dollars more a set; and thus the different volumes of that publication are entirely wasted and lost so far as any benefit comes from their distribution.

Take the matter of the publication of the records of the rebellion. There will be ninety-five volumes, I am told, and those ninety-five volumes will go one to one constituent to whom a member wants to pay a compliment. By and by our successors here will be called upon to send the fiftieth or fifty-first volume of these records to a person who has never had any of the preceding volumes and is not likely to have any of the succeeding ones.

The chairman of the Committee on Printing, who I believe fully sympathizes with the purpose of this amendment, has endeavored more than once to have a general law which should secure this matter, and it has passed the Senate on his recommendation and has gone down to the House and failed there in the press of business. Now I wish to put upon the bill for the printing of this costly volume of the census a carefully prepared scheme for its distribution. As I said before, it leaves every Senator to take the present method if he pleases, because he may order his set to be sent to him; but if he does not it saves him the trouble of franking. It insures that the volumes will all go to the same place because the successor will inquire of the Interior Department where the previous volumes went, and it gives the Senator the same opportunity to pay a compliment to anybody to whom he chooses by requiring the Interior Department to send with the volume a statement of at whose request it was sent to the recipient.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator have the amendment read again?

Mr. HOAR. I will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has arrived.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish my statement, and then I will have it read again. This amendment has been very carefully prepared, under the direction of our late colleague, now the Secretary of the Interior Department, by the accomplished librarian of the Department of the Interior. I desire to have read two letters, one addressed by Secretary Kirkwood to the chairman of the Committee on Printing on this subject, and another addressed by the present Secretary of the Interior to me, heartily indorsing this scheme. Let the amendment be read again in the first instance and then these two letters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has passed.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senate will at least allow this amendment to be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senate will finish this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we had better have these letters printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. Let them be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Have them read and printed in the RECORD, so that we can examine them, and let the whole matter go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. We cannot get it up to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. This amendment, I think, when I get through, will be adopted by the Senate without further debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand it, and therefore shall not oppose it. I only want to insist upon the tax bill being taken up now, so that we may make some progress during this day on that topic.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be read if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 6, 1882.

SIR: As this Department is in receipt of numerous requests for the reports of the Tenth Census prepared under its supervision, and as no provision has yet been made by Congress for the printing and distribution of this series of reports, I have the honor to invite the attention of your committee to the inclosed draft of a joint resolution having this end in view. The investigations of the Tenth Census were more comprehensive than those of any census ever before taken, and the information obtained is in proportion large and varied.

These statistics when prepared for publication will constitute a voluminous and invaluable work, comprising, it is estimated, from 18 to 25 quarto volumes of nearly 1,000 pages each.

Taking this fact into consideration, and also the further fact that the printing of these volumes in editions sufficiently large to meet all proper demands on the part of the public will require a very large appropriation, it will be admitted that some method of distribution should be adopted by which, in the first place, all duplication of these volumes may be avoided, and, in the second place, by which libraries and public institutions in whose possession they will be of special service to the public shall be assured of complete sets.

The inclosed resolution has been drawn with particular reference to these two objects, providing, as it does, that the whole edition of these volumes shall be distributed by one agency, though in no wise interfering with the customary rights and privileges of members of the two Houses of Congress in the matter of distribution.

The agency specified is this Department in part, because the documents in question are prepared under its supervision, but chiefly because an office designed for the general distribution of documents has already been established by Congressional action in connection with the Department, and has long been in operation, so that no new machinery will be required in order to accomplish the distribution provided for. Careful provision is made for securing that the party receiving one or more of these volumes upon the order of a member of Congress shall be informed upon whose request it is supplied, so that due credit may be accorded by him to the Senator or Representative through whose courtesy it is sent. No disadvantage or special inconvenience to any member of Congress would seem to be involved in the method of distribution suggested, while the care that is taken in the dispatch of documents from this Department, in the record that is kept of the same, and of their receipt by the parties to whom they are addressed affords the best guarantee that their distribution will be properly accomplished and that these documents will reach their destination.

On the other hand the advantages afforded by the proposed method of distribution are manifest, especially in this, that any possible duplication will be at once detected and prevented, for whenever the name of an individual or institution that has already received the same is submitted for one or more of these volumes, the records of the Department will show the fact of such reception, and no duplicate copy will be sent, thus saving to the Senator or Representative for some party, yet unsupplied, the volume or volumes that would under the ordinary system have been sent in duplicate.

As documents are distributed under the method that now usually obtains, the members of one House of Congress are in ignorance of what members of the other House have done, and there is no doubt but that in a large number of cases both are sending the same documents to the same parties. This perhaps would not be regarded as a matter of very serious importance in the case of an ordinary document, but in the case of documents of the character of those under consideration, and costing what these volumes will cost, it is believed to be worthy the careful consideration of Congress.

It is probable that Senators in very many instances will put upon their lists to receive the census reports the names of the same papers and periodicals, the names of the same libraries and other public institutions, the names of the same prominent individuals connected with the two political parties, and of many others, that are also upon the lists of Representatives for the same purpose.

The only practical means of guarding against the great and unnecessary waste that will result from this sending of the same documents to the same parties is to provide that the whole edition shall be distributed through one agency. It is believed that on the basis as to numbers provided in the accompanying resolutions, and on the supposition that this work will embrace twenty volumes, not less than $150,000 will be saved to the Government in the printing of these reports by the method of distribution suggested in accomplishing the same results that would be accomplished under the ordinary method. In other words, the expenditure of $1,000,000 for the printing and distribution of these volumes under the provisions of this resolution will suffice to put them into as many separate and individual hands as will be reached by the expenditure of $1,150,000 under the usual system.

This amount of saving will be increased should the volumes cost more than $2 per copy, or the number printed be much increased above that specified in the resolution. In view of the importance of publishing a large edition of this work, and of securing the widest distribution possible for the amount to be appropriated for printing the same, it is hoped that the provisions of this resolution may commend themselves to the favorable consideration of your committee.

The number of copies of the several volumes specified has been fixed with regard to the wide interest that has been awakened in the result of the Tenth Census, and of the large demand being and that will continue to be made for these reports.

The number, however, can be increased or diminished without interfering with the distinctive features of the resolution. Should it be thought desirable this Department might be required to report to Congress not only the names of institutions to which these reports are sent under the provisions of the resolution but also the names of all individuals. Such information might be of service to Congress in the matter of future legislation touching the distribution of documents.

The publication of this series of reports affords an unusual opportunity for testing the wisdom of the method of distribution herein suggested, and it is confidently believed that the result will be entirely satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Very respectfully,

S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 18, 1882.

SIR: Referring to the bill now before the Senate, providing for the publication of the reports of the Tenth Census, the inclosed copy of a letter addressed by this Department to the chairman of the Committee on Printing expresses its views in the premises.

While the number of copies of said reports suggested in the resolution accompanying this letter is larger than that named in the bill above referred to, the arguments in behalf of the methods of distribution suggested apply with equal force to the smaller number.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, United States Senator.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to say that it is but a few years since the Interior Department sent a communication to Congress stating that there had accumulated in the rooms of the Interior Department a great many hundred thousand volumes that were left there, just as this proposes to leave them, and asking Congress to make some provision for their distribution. In view of that Congress passed a joint resolution authorizing the distribution of those books through the members, and I think there were from five hundred to seven hundred volumes of these accumulated books of all kinds, including some very valuable ones and some of less value. Among them were copies of the American State Papers; there were whole sets of the Annals of Congress. There were books which could not be found anywhere, distributed to members. As a reservoir of valuable books, for their disposition ten, twenty, or thirty years hence, this plan is a very good one, a very excellent one, because otherwise these books will be scattered where they cannot be obtained at all.

It seems to me, and I think of it in connection with this very proposition because it comes from the Interior Department, that ten or fifteen years hence we shall have a notice from the Interior Department that that Department is filled up with this class of books and Congress should provide for them, and there will then be a distribution which will be valuable to those who live in those days.

Mr. HOAR. Let me add one word. If this amendment is adopted, to which I understand the chairman of the Committee on Printing assents, then in future resolutions for printing documents it will be simply necessary to distribute them according to the provision now by law applied to the census reports.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to propose an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand that now we are to have no further debate on this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. No, no.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to speak two minutes. This amendment provides that the document shall be distributed in sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions as may be named by the Senator and ten to be named by the Representative. I think there are districts where there are not ten public libraries, and I think that therefore this had better be amended by saying "to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions or individuals," so that the sets shall go to ten individuals from each Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. INGALLS. That is provided for in the subsequent clause because they can be sent to individuals upon the application of any Senator or Representative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts can accept the modification.

Mr. HOAR. It does no harm.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the word "institutions," in line 9 of the amendment, I move to insert "or individuals."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. And in lines 11 and 22, after the word "institutions," in each of those lines, I move the same amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let us take a vote. I do not wish to speak.

Mr. ALLISON. But other Senators say they desire to speak.

Mr. ANTHONY. No one desires to speak. The Senator from Kansas was just in fun.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to speak, but I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate more than a moment. I do not see in this amendment a provision which is alluded to in the letter just read to the Senate; that is, that there shall not be a duplicate sent under the order of a Senator or Representative to a library unless the parties are notified of the fact.

Mr. HOAR. I think that is understood by the Interior Department.

Mr. PENDLETON. It may be understood by them, but it is not in the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it is necessary to put that in; but if the Senator thinks it is necessary I will defer to him.

Mr. PENDLETON. I think it advisable to put it in; but I do not intend to embarrass the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am thoroughly in sympathy with it; but I think it advisable to put into the amendment itself a direction that duplicate copies shall not be sent under the direction of a Senator or Representative to different libraries without advising them of the fact. In Cincinnati and in other large cities perhaps duplicate copies would be advisable, but in many libraries they would not be.

Mr. HOAR. I will then add to the amendment, after the word "Congress," in the eighteenth line:

Provided, That no duplicate shall be sent of any volume until the party requesting it shall be first informed that it is a duplicate.

Mr. PENDLETON. That is just the amendment I had sketched on my bill, and that satisfies me entirely.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be now read as modified.

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose by accident some duplicate should reach a library, what would happen? Would it be sent back to any Senator or Representative? This is a very important amendment, and I do not think it is entirely understood.

Mr. HOAR. I will accept the form proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether I understand the amendment as amended. Under this amendment the entire set of documents will be sent to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. INGALLS. The entire edition will be sent.

Mr. COCKRELL. The entire edition of the publication will be sent to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. INGALLS. We shall have to build a public building to hold them.

Mr. HOAR. They have ample accommodation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then each Senator can send an order there for fifteen sets.

Mr. HOAR. No; he can send the names of fifteen libraries. Then, in addition to that, he may have the whole balance of those put at his distribution sent to his room, just as they are now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is the authority for that?

Mr. HOAR. "And in volumes to such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates." He may designate himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no authority in this amendment which would permit a Senator or a Representative to send to the Interior Department and have any of these books sent to his room.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that there is.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is none.

Mr. ALLISON. I am satisfied that this bill cannot be passed this morning. I move to take up the tax bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. If this bill goes over now I do not believe it will be taken up again this session.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not take it up to-morrow morning?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have done my duty, and I shall not be responsible for the failure to print the census. The bill will take no longer time now than it will take hereafter, and I think it can be disposed of in ten minutes now. At all events it must be done.

Mr. HOAR. No suggestion has been made except as to whether the phraseology of the amendment is explicit on some minor point. It can easily be removed. I hope the Senate will not waste the hour it has spent on this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I hope not either.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to inserting there that any Senator or Representative may require his quota to be sent to him if he sees fit, though I think it is clear enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before this can be acted on it must be understood, and it must be very definite and certain. Now, in our Western States we have not the same number of organized libraries that they have in some other States, and yet our people are just as anxious for the information contained in these reports as they are in the States where libraries are organized.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the words "libraries and other public institutions" the words "or individuals" have been inserted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not propose that the distribution of these valuable works shall be confined to village libraries.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is quite right. I suggest to him, on the twelfth line, after the words "in volumes to," to put in:

Senators and Representatives, or such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, until the quota of each shall be full.

That would cover the Senator's objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be inserted there so that we can understand it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 12, after the word "to," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert:

Senators and Representatives, or.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have it read as it stands.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should like to have it read again myself. I move now to proceed with the tax bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall finish this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withhold his motion for a few moments?

Mr. INGALLS. How can that motion be made? This question is properly before the Senate, and a motion to proceed to the tax bill is not in order. This bill has got to be disposed of in some way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill came up in the morning hour. The Chair announced when the morning hour had closed, and the Senator from Iowa rose at once. The Chair allowed the Senator from Massachusetts to occupy five minutes after.

Mr. HOAR. I had the floor when the Senator rose and raised the point and the Chair sustained it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair allowed the Senator from Massachusetts five minutes beyond the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. Where did the Chair get any authority to allow me five minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection was made. It was the duty of the Chair exactly at twelve o'clock to call attention to the fact that the morning hour had expired.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be good enough to point to the section of the rule which gives him authority to allow Senators five minutes beyond their time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair could say that the morning hour was out, and then if it was the pleasure of the Senate to go on with the regular business it could do so.

Mr. ALLISON. If I saw any prospect that this bill would be finished, I would give way, but we have been twenty minutes on it now beyond the morning hour. I make the motion——

Mr. HOAR. I hope the motion will not prevail. I think that there is other business which can be attended to at this session, and a part of that business is the printing of the census report, and this scheme, if it be well devised, if it be what I believe it to be, will save the Government the wasteful expenditure of hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars. The report which is to be distributed will cost $800,000 according to the estimate, and some think it will cost millions.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is evincing uncommon anxiety about the tax bill, what prospect he sees for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, which I supposed there would be some anxiety about at this time?

Mr. ALLISON. I see no prospect to-day. I understand that bill is not to be taken up to-day; but we must proceed with the essential business of the session. I do not know but that this bill is important, but we are making amendments to it at the Clerk's desk, putting in changes in this important proposition, and I want to see them in print, and the matter can just as well go over until to-morrow morning and be taken up then and intelligently disposed of.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to have new resolutions offered from the House or the Senate extending the old appropriations of last year any longer.

Mr. INGALLS. When does the last one expire?

Mr. BECK. The last one we passed was about a week ago, which extends the appropriations to the 31st day of this month. If we expect to pass the naval appropriation bill and allow the Government to run on, it is time we were passing it, or we shall have to extend the old appropriations again and continue a pretty bad condition of things now existing, and fail to get the benefit of the good we are proposing in the new bill. The tax bill of course will run a month or two, and the naval bill may pass in an hour or two. I should like to see the Government running on and the naval appropriations made.

Mr. ROLLINS. I suggest that we extend the resolution to the 31st day of January next, which will obviate all difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing the regular order, which is the Anthony rule.

Mr. HOAR. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to go into a controversy.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not think the morning business ought to be set aside in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding with the call of the usual morning business when by unanimous consent the Senate took up the bill in regard to printing the census reports.

Mr. MAXEY. Reports of committees are to be laid over, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given. If the Senator had been here he could have objected. The morning business was set aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAXEY. I was in committee-room hard at work preparing reports. I do not see the justice and reason of cutting off the opportunity to make reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot help it. The morning hour expires at twelve o'clock. The Chair would be glad to receive everything now if he could.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa postponing the regular order to take up the——

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On postponing the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is proceedings under the Anthony rule.

Mr. ALLISON. This printing matter is not pending before the Senate now, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why, I thought it was taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It expired at twelve o'clock, but the Senator from Massachusetts was allowed to continue his remarks. The Senator from Iowa got up and made his motion then.

Mr. HOAR. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Proceedings under the Anthony rule.

Mr. HOAR. Was not the census bill continued by unanimous consent after twelve o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir. The Senator from Iowa stood up all the time and said that as soon as the Senator from Massachusetts concluded he would make his motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think anybody wishes to say another word. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. If a vote can be taken, I shall not object.

Mr. MORRILL. If a vote can be taken on this bill, there is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his motion?

Mr. ALLISON. If a vote can be taken I am perfectly willing to withdraw it temporarily for that purpose, but not to lose it.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the state of the bill now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I ask to have the amendment read again as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa give way to have this read? If so the Chair will understand that this bill is to proceed until it is finished.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, I was only temporarily in charge of this tax bill in the absence of the Senator from Vermont, and at his request I made this motion. Now, if the Senator from Vermont, having charge of the tax bill, is willing that this matter of printing shall be injected here, which will certainly take an hour or two to dispose of, I shall not interpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object, provided a vote can be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. But it cannot be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, it can.

Mr. MORRILL. If a vote can be taken without debate after reading the amendment, I will not object; otherwise I shall ask that the tax bill be proceeded with.

Mr. HOAR. There was more time taken in saying that which the Senator from Vermont has now said for the first time than would have sufficed to pass the bill. This is the way time is wasted.

Mr. CONGER. I object to any arrangement by which this vote shall be taken without debate or opportunity for debate.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I insist on the motion made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate postpone the regular order, which is the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, with a view to take up the tax bill, as it is called?

Mr. HOAR. I do not call for the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move now to proceed to the consideration of the bill for the printing of the census.

Mr. HALE. Pending that I rise to a privileged report, a conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that I am entitled to have my motion stated from the Chair. Then the Senator comes in as of right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Pending that I offer a conference report. Nobody will object. There is only to be a vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine presents a conference report, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I move that the report be accepted.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator state for the information of the Senate, in order that we may ascertain what the condition of the public business is, whether this disagreement is to all the items, or whether a concurrence has been reached as to part?

Mr. HALE. Under the action of the House and Senate the other day an agreement was reached on every point in the bill except the item in relation to Senatorial mileage for the extra session of last October. Upon that, and that alone, the conferees have met and disagreed, and this report is the result of that meeting and disagreement. I move the acceptance of the report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. Now I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit House of Correction, in the State of Michigan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 114) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to Indian traders;

A bill (S. No. 469) to provide for the sale of certain Kickapoo Indian lands in Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 679) for the relief of William A. Gavett; and

A bill (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I rise to a privileged report. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the river and harbor bill.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 99, 102, 103, and 104.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 100 and 101, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 141, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten:" also, after the word "constructed," in line 153, insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement. The Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause an examination or survey, or both, and estimates of the cost of improvement proper to be made between City Island and New Rochelle Harbor, New York, and including the channel around Glen Island, the expense of such survey to be paid out of the amount appropriated in this act for examinations and surveys;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 481, strike out "five" and insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "therefor," in line 1168, to and including the word "Chicago," in line 1171; also, in line 1172 strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty;" also, after the word "appropriated," in line 1174, insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement;" and the Senate agree to the same.

S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
JNO. P. JONES,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. F. PAGE,
AMOS TOWNSEND,
R. M. MCLANE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I can state for the information of the Senate the effect of the action recommended by the committee of conference. It is as follows:

Amendment No. 17: The appropriation for the survey of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal is reduced from $20,000 to $10,000, and a proviso added that nothing herein contained shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed to the construction of the said improvement.

There is also added a provision for a survey between City Island and New Rochelle Harbor, New York, including the channel around Glen Island, which is a survey at this point, inserted at the request of the House conference committee in view of the concession which they had made. It does not affect the other; it is merely an ordinary survey, and in the same position as the other general surveys embraced in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. A new item inserted?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir. By amendment No. 41 the appropriation for the Potomac River at Washington is reduced from $ 00,000 to $400,000. By amendment numbered 98 the amount appropriated for the survey of the Hennepin Canal is reduced from $100,000 to $30,000, and the following proviso is added:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the said improvement.

By amendments Nos. 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, and 105 the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River below Cairo is reduced from $5,000,000 to $4,123,000, as provided by the House. The items providing for a lock at the mouth of the Bayou Plaquemine and for the expenditure of a sum not exceeding $35,000 for Alton Harbor are agreed to, and the work is to be prosecuted under the direction of the Mississippi River commission, as provided by the House, instead of the Secretary of War, as provided by the Senate.

This action will reduce the aggregate of the bill from $19,800,875 to $18,743,875. The reduction in the amount with reference to the two canals is made upon communications from the Chief of Engineers, justifying that reduction and stating that the amount allowed is sufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to say that $30,000 is regarded by the Chief of Engineers as sufficient to make the survey and location of the Hennepin Canal and also to make the survey of the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal?

Mr. MCMILLAN. That matter was submitted distinctly to the Chief of Engineers, and he says:

First. For the Hennepin Canal and other objects stated in House bill No. 6242, in lines from 1139 to 1174—

Which embraces both the objects referred to by the Senator from Iowa—

$30,000 is sufficient.

And in regard to the Chesapeake and Delaware Bay Canal he says $10,000 is sufficient.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the reduction of the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River from $5,000,000 to $4,123,000 is in conformity with any recommendation from the War Department, or is it contrary to the express recommendation of the Mississippi River commission and also of the Secretary of War?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No communication or information from any official source was received by the conference committee on that subject.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me inquire if the message of the President transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, and also from the Mississippi River commission, is not a communication which was under the consideration of a conference committee.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator could not have heard what I said, or that question perhaps would have been unnecessary. I said the committee of conference had received no official communication on that subject during their sessions.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now I ask the Senator what I asked in the first place, and he replied by saying they had received no communication. I ask him if that reduction was not made against and in the face of an estimate for $5,000,000 made by the Mississippi River commission and transmitted to the Senate and to the House?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not understand that it was for the purpose embraced in this bill. However that may be, the House conferees insisted upon the amount named in the House bill as the only amount which should be allowed for the purposes named in the bill, and the Senate conferees believed that if the Senate did not recede from its amendment and accede to the House its position the bill would not pass.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, may I ask the Senator another question? Had the conferees of the Senate any better reason to suppose the House would not submit to an increase of $250,000 for one State alone over the appropriation made in the House bill, added by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees of the House and Senate?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will try to make myself understood. Does the Senator believe that the House would have opposed accepting the report made by the conferees of the House and Senate in respect to the amendments put upon the river and harbor bill by the Senate increasing in one State the House bill $250,000 if the Senate conferees had adhered to the appropriation asked by our amendment for the Mississippi River?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senate conferees were satisfied beyond doubt that the House would not agree to any change in the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River improvement, and they believed that the bill would not pass if there was a disagreement between the conferees. The conferees on the part of the Senate believed that the interests of the Mississippi River and all the public interests involved would be subserved by the Senate conferees yielding to the conferees of the House upon that point. All the other points are conceded by the conferees of the House except in regard to that amendment.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from Minnesota what is the amount of increase now put upon the bill by the Senate?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill as it came from the House appropriated $17,367,875. The Senate Committee on Commerce added to that $2,096,100. The Senate added to those sums $683,600, making a total of $20,147,575. The reduction by the first conference committee, and agreed to, was $346,700; the reduction by the second conference is $1,057,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. At the expense of what, may I inquire?

Mr. McMILLAN. No expense whatever, but in the interest of the public as the Senate conferees understand it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of that $683,000, if I mistake not, fully one-half is at the expense of the $877,000 taken off the Mississippi River improvement.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand that the agreement to the amount appropriated for the improvement of the Potomac River is at all at the expense of the Mississippi River appropriation or any other public improvement.

Mr. KELLOGG. But $250,000 are added to the North Carolina improvements.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is there any other question of difference except the appropriation for the Mississippi?

Mr. McMILLAN. We have agreed upon all the items.

Mr. VOORHEES. What provision is made for the Mississippi River? What does it get?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Mississippi River has appropriated for its improvement from Cairo to the passes $4,123,000. It has $600,000 additional from Cairo to the Illinois River, including Alton Harbor, and $200,000 additional from the Illinois River to the Des Moines Rapids; and it has $250,000 additional from the Des Moines Rapids to the Falls of Saint Anthony. It has other special appropriations for specific points, some few.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me for interrupting him, I desire to say that, in my judgment, the Senate had better take what is agreed to by the conference at this stage of the session. I do not think anybody will charge me with a want of liberality toward the Mississippi River or its tributaries. This is in itself quite a munificent appropriation of over $4,000,000. It is but a little while until another session of Congress intervenes, when other provision can be made. This is certainly enough to start the great work, and start it in no mean or niggardly way. I trust and I believe that that will be the common sense of the Senate and of the country, that we shall acquiesce in what the House insists upon on this point. While it is not as much as I would be glad to give, nor perhaps was the original amount equal to what I would have given, yet under all the circumstances, surrounded as we are by a closing session and all its duties, I believe candidly that we had better close the river and harbor bill upon the basis presented by the Senator from Minnesota; and I shall vote accordingly.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the reduction in the appropriation for his Chesapeake and Delaware Canal was made upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. The Chief of Engineers, in response to a communication addressed by a member of the conference committee on the part of the House, said that $10,000 would be amply sufficient for the survey.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment No. 99, upon the question of the Mississippi River, the most important appropriation in the entire bill and the amount which passed the Senate unanimously. It is the only appropriation which will benefit all the producers and consumers in the whole United States. The Senate has a right to insist upon that amendment, the people have a right to expect the Senate to insist upon it, and I hope the Senate will insist upon it.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to learn from the Senator from Minnesota if I understand the figures correctly. If I understood the Senator aright, from the head of the passes of the Mississippi River to Cairo there is appropriated $4,120,000?

Mr. McMILLAN. Four million one hundred and twenty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. LOGAN. Then from Cairo what is the next point?

Mr. McMILLAN. Six hundred thousand dollars from Cairo to the Illinois River, including Alton Harbor.

Mr. LOGAN. Then how much from there?

Mr. McMILLAN. Two hundred thousand from the Illinois River to the Des Moines Rapids.

Mr. LOGAN. Then the next point?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is another item of $250,000 from the Des Moines Rapids to the Falls of Saint Anthony.

Mr. LOGAN. Then above the Falls of Saint Anthony $300,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Ten thousand dollars for the river above that point, and for the reservoirs $300,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That would be $310,000. If I have made the calculation correctly it would be $5,483,000 for the whole Mississippi River.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the figures are added right; there are some specific items for localities along the river not included.

Mr. LOGAN. But the general appropriation for the Mississippi River is $5,483,000.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is a great deal of very sound discretion in what the Senator from Indiana has said. It is more than probable that the best thing the representatives of the people of the Mississippi Valley can do is to accept the report as it comes to us, but I do not propose that it shall be agreed to until I express my opinion in regard to the extraordinary conduct of a co-ordinate part of the Government, the House of Representatives and its conferees, in regard to this question. In the battle of epithets which raged here the other day, when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] attacked the conference committee, I took no part. I satisfied myself upon reflection to "let the galled jade wince," my "withers are unwrung." I had made no increase on the bill for the local interests of any portion of the State of Missouri, although I was a member of the Committee on Commerce. Five thousand dollars was placed in the bill at my instance for a river in Southeast Missouri, and that was stricken out by the committee of conference. I made no complaint of it; I let it go.

I devoted all my energies, all my strength, and what little ability I possessed in the Commerce Committee to the improvement of the Mississippi River and the Missouri River. For those great national highways I was willing to strike out every dollar for every local interest in Missouri if the Government would give its bounty to those great rivers, whose improvement is so necessary to the people of the Northwest and of this whole country.

Now, what is the result? The Senate of the United States, representing the sovereign States of the Union, by a unanimous vote declared that $5,000,000 should be given to the improvement of the Mississippi River, and $1,000,000 to the Missouri River. The President of the United States, coming from the eastern portion of the Union, and one of the Atlantic States, never having been upon the banks of the Mississippi River, with no local influence about him, but induced by the overwhelming interests involved in the improvement of that great river, sent an extraordinary, a special message to the Senate and the Congress of the United States recommending the appropriation made by the Senate, and even a larger one.

In the face of all these facts, after we had unanimously voted in favor of $5,000,000 for the Mississippi River and $1,000,000 to the Missouri River, the House of Representatives send us a bill for over $17,000,000; and while the whole country indorses the Mississippi River appropriation the press of the country, the public men of the country, the officials of the country without a dissenting voice, so far as I know, the House of Representatives says, we will strike down the appropriation for every river and harbor in the United States rather than put on $1,000,000 more for the Mississippi River in accordance with the recommendation of the Mississippi River commission.

Sir, the Senate of the United States has come to this, that it must give up its deliberate judgment under an oath of office taken by each of us. If we are to give up our judgments thus to the House of Representatives, then we might as well abdicate all right and all part in any portion of the legislative power of the country.

The bill comes back to us with a million dollars struck off for the Mississippi River, and half of the $100,000 added for the Missouri River which had been voted unanimously by the Senate struck off, and a provision put upon it which absolutely destroys the system recommended by Mr. Suter, the engineer for that river.

Mr. President, I have no official information of the fact, but I want to say that some potent influence is at work in the House of Representatives, subtle—I will not use the word of the Senator from Kansas, "sinister"—but most extraordinary. I have heard it said, I cannot believe it, but the air is rife with the rumor and the statement that members from States upon the banks of the Mississippi River have protested against the increase made by the Senate.

I do not blame the conferees of the Senate; they have doubtless done their best; but I have heard it, and I believe it to be absolutely correct, that this opposition does not come from other sections, but it comes from the representatives of the people who are vitally interested in the improvement of that great river. Those representatives, I am proud to say, are not from the State of Missouri.

I want the people of this country to know who has done this thing. I want the people of the Mississippi Valley to know from my place in the Senate that my skirts and those of my colleague and of the Senators from Louisiana and of Mississippi and all the Senators representing those States are free from the responsibility of this reduction. It comes from another source, and let the people of those States hold to the strictest responsibility the men who have done it.

I shall vote probably in the last resort, if I can do no better, for this report, but I do it under protest. I do it remonstrating against the rank, the gross injustice perpetrated upon the people of the Mississippi Valley and upon the Senate. If my course were mapped out and pursued by myself without reference to anything but my own feeling I would say to the Senate, "stand by the original amount of $5,000,000." If the House of Representatives see proper to defeat the river and harbor bill rather than give us $1,000,000 more for the Mississippi River, after they have appropriated over $13,000,000 for all the minor improvements, let them take the responsibility and go back to their constituents and answer for it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the representatives of the country in the Senate and in the House believe that all parts of the United States have some rights in a bill of this kind. They do not believe that the entire interests of the country are centered in any one locality, East or West, North or South, or in the middle. It is susceptible of proof, because it is in figures right before any gentleman who will foot it up, that the Mississippi River and its tributaries in the river and harbor appropriation bill have half of all the money appropriated in the bill. There is half of it on the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers alone, to say nothing of the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Red, the Arkansas, the White, the Current, and a dozen others that could be mentioned which are tributaries of the Mississippi River. More than a third of the whole appropriation is on the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers alone.

Has there been anything niggardly in the appropriation to the Mississippi and its tributaries? Taking them all together, half of this large appropriation is made to the Mississippi River and its tributaries. That is a matter of computation which is before every Senator. Take all the tributaries and all the Mississippi, and it can be shown to be half, or about that.

If the Senator from Missouri thinks that other Senators and other Representatives propose to transfer to any one part of this country the whole appropriation, or the great burden of it to another part of the country, he is mistaken. Here are appropriations for tributaries of the Mississippi River intended to make them navigable streams, to give the people along their borders the opportunity of floating their produce upon them, not that they are so now any more than an undug canal.

From my knowledge of the appropriations for rivers and harbors for the last thirteen years, and I believe I have given a careful and honest examination of the whole subject during that term, I say there has not been up to this year so munificent, so magnificent an appropriation for the Mississippi River and its tributaries as there is in this bill. There never began to be. It seems as if the whole country and the representatives of every region, the representatives of the Atlantic coast and the rivers and harbors running into the Atlantic coast, and of the Pacific coast, and of the great basin of the lakes, have vied with each other—I say, without fear of contradiction, that they have vied with each other in exhibiting liberality to this great interior empire of the Mississippi Valley, the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

A few years ago it would not have been dreamed that there should have been given eight, ten, or eleven million dollars to the Mississippi River and its tributaries. It would not have been thought possible that the common judgment of all the representatives of the people should have come to an accord as they have in this bill, by making these munificent, these magnificent appropriations for the speedy reclamation of the channels and the commerce and navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

But the more that is given the more complaint there is that more is not given. This vast amount of appropriations for the Mississippi is made here, which the Senator from Missouri knows and I know, and every man who thinks of it knows cannot possibly be expended before the 4th of March next with any economy or any judicious application of means to an end. This great appropriation is made here, and the Senator from Missouri says if he cannot get the remaining $500,000 or the remaining $1,000,000 let the bill go down; let all works stop; let the improvements cease; let all the magnificent improvements of the whole country stop for the year rather than lose $500,000 or $1,000,000 for the Mississippi, which by any possibility cannot be expended until another river and harbor bill, if any is passed at all next year, will have been passed.

Try these millions; experiment with them; carry on this great work on the Mississippi River; do all that can be done for its improvement and for its tributaries, and it is impossible from the time when work can be carried on, aside from freshets and floods, that this money can be judiciously expended. We all know that very well. While we know it, we are desirous that there should be a large appropriation, that contracts may be entered into, that the plans may be carried out or at least may be insured.

I speak for the valley of the lakes, with its important navigation interests; I speak for the Atlantic coast; I speak for the Pacific coast as well as for the Mississippi Valley. I say let us pass this bill; let the work of improving these navigable streams and the harbors of the country go on. Another year, when we have reports of these expenditures, we can judge better whether we have left out large appropriations that ought to have been made for the Mississippi, and can add to them. It is on the list of public works. It is a grand scheme. We thought in early days that the Mississippi was a great inland sea that needed no more appropriations to make it navigable than the ocean itself, but we found with the greater increase of depths of vessels, the increased amount of commerce, the necessities of the country, that there must be great and expensive improvements even upon the Father of Waters to make it do the duty and the toil of the carrying business of the Mississippi Valley. This appropriation, liberal perhaps to the whole country, but especially liberal to the Mississippi Valley, is enough for this remaining portion of the year.

Sir, I do not yield to any one in this Chamber in my desire that the carrying capacity of every river, and of every stream that spreads through all the valley of the Mississippi, shall be improved to its utmost capacity within reasonable limits, and that as speedily as possible. That is necessary to the development, to the growth, to the necessities of our common country. We have come to a place now where the judgment of the two Houses differs in regard to the amount of an appropriation, and I for one would not sacrifice the vast interests that circumscribe the whole exterior coast of the United States, and the great lakes, and all the other parts of the country, by claiming the addition of a few thousand dollars, more or less, for any particular region of the country.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have just one word to say. There is a great deal said about the Mississippi River here, and I wish simply to call attention to one fact. The Senate ought to act upon facts, not on mere assertions. I hold in my hand the report of the Bureau of Statistics upon the internal commerce of the country. There is the map, and there is the route which the Mississippi River takes in bearing the production of the Mississippi Valley into the gulf and into the ocean. Yet the Senate and the committee have seen fit to give that stream of commerce which passes along the coast of Florida but $300,000, in defiance of the report of the engineers and of the statistics of commerce, which show 2,000,000 bales of cotton, 15,000,000 bushels of grain, and returning cargoes from the Mississippi River alone, following the extension of its channel along the coast of Florida, and up to the cities of the Atlantic seaboard. Three hundred thousand dollars alone is proposed to be given as against $6,000,000, and yet the report of the Bureau of Statistics is that 81 per cent. or 300,000,000 bushels of the 400,000,000 bushels of grain which finds its way eastward goes upon the railroads of the country, and only 80,000,000 bushels by water transportation.

I am not averse to any appropriation which may be necessary for the Mississippi River, but I am averse to the committee and the Senate denying the report of the bureaus of the Government, the volume of commerce and the interests of commerce in regard to the Atlantic coast and to my own State. And I wish the point to be distinctly made that great as is the internal commerce of the Mississippi River it is not greater than that which passes out of its mouth and along the coasts of Florida.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not propose to oppose, nor do I think it good policy to oppose the report of the committee of conference. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce, and of course I know somewhat in regard to these amendments. I know what the Mississippi River improvement committee have reported, what estimates have been made by them, the rule adopted by the committee, and by the Senate, in respect to such appropriations, the liberal manner in which appropriations have been given to other States, coming up to the full estimates in many cases, if not exceeding them. I know that this, the most important appropriation, an appropriation that has the best, firmest, surest, and most justifiable foundation, is to be cut down; an appropriation especially asked for as applying to the closing of the crevasses and gaps occasioned by the disastrous floods of the last few months. That is sacrificed for no good reason, as I believe. Whether for the reason given by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I do not myself know, and I do not care to go into it further, but this whole matter has a singular history. The Senate amendment is cut down and divided among certain States supposed to be a little short under the provisions of the House bill. It can all be summed up in the quotation, not correctly rendered I admit, from a book probably not much known to some of the Senate: "They parted our raiment, and for our vestment did they cast lots."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I wish merely to say in regard to the injustice to the House conferees, that they were heartily in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River and that they represented the feeling as general throughout all parts of the country which compelled them to take the position they did in regard to this report. The House conferees stood upon that principle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report. The Chair would inform the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that if the report of the committee of conference is concurred in that concludes the whole question, and therefore his motion will not be put.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to correct an error which occurred in transcribing the amendments to the bill adopted by the Senate. The item in regard to Echo Harbor, New Rochelle, was reported as amended by the engrossing clerk, when the item preceding was the one which had been amended. In line 19, on page 3 of the bill, I ask to insert, where the word "ten" occurs, the word "fifteen," and further to disagree to the amendment numbered 5 to the bill, which is the one which was inaccurately made. It is a clerical error, and I am desired by the conference committee to have the correction made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to having this correction made?

Mr. HARRIS. Does the error that the Senator suggests has occurred change the bill as it stands?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was a clerical error made by the engrossing clerk. The bill as passed by the Senate is the correct bill, of course, but in engrossing the amendments the engrossing clerk made a mistake in placing the amendment upon a wrong item in the bill. The change will reduce the amount of the appropriation $2,000, and it corrects it in accordance with the action of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The question that I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to is this: the bill having passed both Houses, and the report of the committee of conference having been concurred in, can the Senate by unanimous consent or otherwise change any feature or any one of the phrases or words in the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. The report has not been concurred in by the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not propose to make any motion, but only wished to call the attention of the Senator to the matter.

Mr. McMILLAN. The report of the committee of conference has not yet been made to the House.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand that there are precedents for such action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is given to the correction of the error.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 12th instant for the printing of 1,000 copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy for the use of the Navy Department.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Captain Charles F. Powell, Corps of Engineers, of a survey of the Columbia River at the Dalles, in Oregon, made in compliance with requirements in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to proceed to the consideration of the census bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Is that motion in order? The Senator from Massachusetts does not want it now.

Mr. HOAR. I do want it very much indeed, but wanting it very much indeed, I will still waive it for the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I shall make the motion to-morrow morning to take up the census bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to proceed with the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to take up the revenue bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Before voting on that, for my information I should like to ascertain what is the condition of the appropriation bills. The naval appropriation bill has been reported to the Senate for ten days, and now lies upon the table awaiting action. The joint resolution continuing appropriations will expire in five days from to-day. The sundry civil bill, as I understand, is yet in the Committee on Appropriations not reported. I should like for information to ascertain, if the chairman of the committee will advise me, when we may expect to have the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas, I think I can assure him that day after to-morrow morning we shall be able to present that bill to the Senate with sundry amendments.

Mr. INGALLS. It will take considerable time to dispose of the naval appropriation bill. Both of those bills will necessarily be obliged to go into conference. I hope the Senate will feel it to be its duty, and that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will feel it to be incumbent upon him, to antagonize the motion made by the Senator from Vermont and ask that the naval appropriation bill may be taken up and considered. There will be abundant time to consider the revenue bill when these appropriation bills are in conference.

Mr. HALE. I certainly shall consider it incumbent upon me either this morning or to-morrow morning to antagonize the tax bill. I wish now to inquire of the Senator from Vermont what course he proposes to pursue to-day if the Senate determine to take up the tax bill to the exclusion of everything else? Yesterday morning I appealed to him in every way—for I yielded then and did not make the motion to take up the naval appropriation bill—to try to hasten the tax bill. I urged him to try to have the five-minute rule applied to the amendments. The day passed and no such attempt was made, although evidently the Senate was tired of the discussion and ready to proceed to vote. Toward night a motion was made for a night session following a recess, which was voted down, and this morning the Senate finds itself but very little further along in the consideration of the tax bill than it was yesterday morning.

So far as I am concerned, I shall speedily, at no further distant day than to-morrow morning, if this bill is not finished, or nearly so, bring before the Senate a motion to take up the naval appropriation bill and let the Senate decide. I ask the Senator from Vermont what course he proposes to pursue as to trying to get rid of the tax bill? We spent yesterday on it and did nothing.

Mr. MORRILL. We did not spend yesterday without doing something, and something rather harmful than otherwise perhaps to the bill. Still we made some progress. So far as I am concerned, I have not consumed the time of the Senate by any elaborate or long speeches upon any amendment or upon the bill itself, and I shall propose myself to continue in the practice of not consuming time and urging the Senate to finish the bill to-day.

Mr. HALE. But will the Senator try, as any Senator may who is in charge of a bill, to limit debate after amendments come up and try to have the five-minute rule applied to them? That has not been done up to this time on the bill. In the whole eleven days which have been consumed nobody has even asked the Senate to consent to the five-minute rule applying to a single amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask now that the five-minute rule be applied to the bill and all further amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to that.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator first to ask that it apply to the pending amendment, and to proceed one at a time and ask for something that we may get.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the tax bill be taken up.

Mr. BECK. The tariff bill shall remain in the Senate, so far as I can help to keep it there, until it is finally disposed of. No factious objection will be made to the early passage of the bill; but if it requires unanimous consent to discuss it under the five-minute rule that consent will never be given, for I shall oppose it. It is a matter of too much importance; it involves the whole system of taxation of the country, and we are just entering now upon the first proposition to amend the tariff. The Senator from Vermont opened the question early in December with an elaborately prepared speech of great weight, no doubt, and we argued it a good while. Finally a tariff commission was appointed, and they are struggling with the question.

Questions have now been thrown in relative to the reduction of taxation on sugar and the increase of the tariff taxation on cottonties, as though those were the only things out of the thousand articles in the tariff that needed any consideration. I shall endeavor to discuss those questions fairly without wasting any time or making any long speech, as that seems to be the dread with some gentlemen in some quarters, so as to have a fair vote taken upon each of the amendments as they come up and have them fairly and fully discussed. If it takes a day to discuss each one, let it be so.

The bill is brought before the Senate now and let us have it fairly understood. We can stay here until December; there is no reason in the world why we should not if this matter is important enough to demand our consideration. I for one am willing to stay until it is discussed, but there shall be no "sitting out," and no five minute-rule, nothing out of the ordinary line. The bill could have been brought in in December last just as well as on the 10th day of July. It has been held back for the pleasure of having a summer discussion instead of a winter one, and I am willing that we shall have it, and have it to the satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I do not expect general discussion upon new subject-matter upon the tax bill to be limited to five minutes; but in my little experience in the Senate I have never known anything that approaches what in the House is known as the previous question except that after an amendment has been discussed and overdiscussed until everybody is tired to death of it, unanimous consent at last is given that upon that amendment the five-minute rule shall apply, and then the talk ceases and we get a vote. We never shall get a result on the different amendments upon the tax bill if at the proper stage that is not consented to and applied so that we may get votes.

Mr. BECK. We have commenced with the first item of tariff taxation relative to the sugar interest, and all that has been said about it was said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] The speech of the Senator from Ohio is withheld from publication to-day so that we cannot see it.

Mr. HALE. Mine was less than five minutes.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps it was, but it is the speech of the Senator from Ohio that we desire to see. The Senator from Ohio undertook while Secretary of the Treasury to overrule the Supreme Court, and he desires us now to overrule it. I want to see the reasons why we should do so, and they are not in the RECORD this morning. The amendment of the Senator from Maine may be a valuable one in that regard. I mention that merely to show that we are only approaching the subject for the first time. There has not been a word said about it yet except what was said yesterday, and we have not in the RECORD what was then said.

I shall endeavor, as I said, to have a fair vote upon each proposition as to the tariff upon the knit-goods question, upon Bessemer steel, upon sugar, upon all the various propositions connected with it. I believe there ought to be a change in the sugar tax. I think we ought to make it 50 per cent. ad valorem. That has been my opinion. That would relieve us four or five million dollars. If we cannot do that, let us simplify it and have one rate on all sugar below No. 13 Dutch standard, and one on sugar above No. 13.

The polariscope may be a very good thing, but the polariscope is very much like the somewhat celebrated story of John Randolph at the race-course when somebody proposed to bet him $100 and said his friend John Smith would hold the stakes, and Mr. Randolph wanted to know who would hold Smith. The polariscope may be a very good thing in the hands of an honest man, but with a cargo of goods depending upon it the man may be color-blind perhaps as to what the standard will show. I do not know as to that, and I want to hear it discussed. That cannot be done in five minutes, in my opinion.

What I rose to say was this: I am willing to go on with the tax bill, and I propose to go on with it. I shall urge every amendment which I think is fair and oppose every amendment that I do not believe is fair. That bill ought to be fairly considered, but I do say that we should take up the naval appropriation bill, which, by the rules of the House, ought to have been reported in sixty days after they met, but which they kept for over seven months, and now, gentlemen, we are holding it back in the Senate for ten days after it is reported, when we are passing joint resolutions to carry on the Government illegally and improperly merely to bridge over the difficulty.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator talks about "holding back" the naval appropriation bill. Does he not know that three days ago the Senate voted not to take it up?

Mr. BECK. I do not blame the Senator from Maine; he has been ready to go on with it.

Mr. HALE. I do not like the Senator to use the phrase "holding back." As soon as I believe the Senate is ready to take up that bill and pass upon it I shall move to take it up; and at a date not further along than to-morrow morning the Senate may have an opportunity of testing it. It has already tried it once.

Mr. BECK. I am not blaming the Senator from Maine. If he had made the motion to take up the naval bill it would have been a good deal stronger than it was.

Mr. HALE. On the contrary I stated at that time that, constrained as I was, I could not make the motion myself, but I considered it no invasion of my privilege.

Mr. BECK. I know it.

Mr. HALE. And I said that I was ready to go on with the bill whenever the Senate was prepared to proceed with it.

Mr. BECK. I did not believe the Senator would regard it as any invasion of his privileges, but he did not feel at liberty to make the motion himself. The Republican caucus had ordered him not to, I presume. Is not that so?

Mr. ALLISON. I am amazed at the Senator from Kentucky trying to inquire into Republican caucuses.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to inquire into that, nor do I care to inquire into the secrets of Mr. HUBBELL and the gentlemen who are running the 2 per cent. assessment on salaries for political purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing the gentleman shall inquire into that subject.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to propound a question.

Mr. HALE. What I wanted to say in answer to the Senator from Kentucky is, that I am amazed with my friend from Iowa at the extent of the knowledge the Senator has of matters that we know nothing about. I fancy that his little fling is only a return for one which went from this side over to that side yesterday about caucuses.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to caucuses. I think the only good thing in the bill was put there by order of the Republican caucus. I am not finding fault with the caucus. The caucus was wiser than the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and dignified the bill very greatly, because the caucus knew that the little absurd bill which was first reported by the Finance Committee was disgraceful and would defeat the Republican party among all intelligent people in the fall campaign. That is my opinion.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it was any more disgraceful than the bill he sent to the Finance Committee last year, or any more so than that reported from the Committee on Ways and Means of the Democratic House?

Mr. BECK. The Democratic House was a little bit unfortunate in being under the lead of some people in a corner who did not lead us in the right direction, in my opinion. But I am not going into the question of the Democratic House. We are dealing with things as they are now. The Democratic House is past; so is Noah's flood past; and a great many other things have gone by. We are living in the present and dealing with the future.

What I want to say is that we have been going along passing resolutions to make provision temporarily to carry on the Government when we have the naval appropriation bill for carrying on that branch of the public business before us and have had it for ten days. I shall not for one vote any more temporary expedients to carry on the naval affairs of the Government after the 31st day of July, when we cannot by proper, legal, legitimate methods make provision for that service, which I am willing to do. To oblige that caucus I shall not again vote to extend the time; but I shall insist that the Senate shall consider the naval appropriation bill and let it be passed in the orderly way, and let the affairs of the Navy go on under the law as we shall pass it. I shall insist at the earliest possible moment that we shall bring up the naval appropriation bill and pass it and then go on with the tariff and tax bill and discuss it fairly until the sundry civil bill is ready. Perhaps we can get along that way for a while, but I do insist that the naval appropriation bill ought to be taken up.

I do not blame the Senator from Maine. I know he has been ready to go on with the bill all the time, and I believe that if I were in charge of a bill and a Democratic caucus had ordered me not to bring it up I would not have rebelled any more than he did.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's programme is a very good one, and I think a wise one, to pass the naval appropriation bill and return to the tax bill and stick to that.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BECK. That is all I want to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the revenue bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Why not take up the naval appropriation bill now, I ask my friend from Maine, who has charge of that bill?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that I am trying to proceed as wisely as possible. I do not think it advisable to make the motion this morning, but I shall certainly make it to-morrow morning. I am willing that the Senator from Vermont shall go on another day and see how he will get along, see what opposition is developed, see what new amendments are introduced, and see what is the likelihood of the speedy disposition of the tax bill; but I agree fully in what the Senator from Kentucky has stated, and I have no doubt he will be borne out by his associates, that no further agreement shall be made to extend appropriations, but that it is our duty to pass the appropriation bill for the Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I regret that my friend from Maine, who has charge of the naval appropriation bill, and on which I had the honor of being one of his lieutenants on the sub-committee, has felt it to be his duty to remain silent so long and allow that bill to lie upon our tables. I take it, though, he has done so for a good and sufficient cause. I wish, however, we had taken up that bill the day after he brought it here. We should have had it passed, probably, and in conference before now, so that we could have proceeded properly with the tax bill now pending before us, and it would have caused much less discussion. I shall aid him to-morrow morning if he makes the motion, and I hope he will succeed in getting up the naval bill and let us dispose of it, and if necessary we can return to the revenue bill, which is before us, until the sundry civil bill is ready, which I hope will be not many days coming to the Senate. As I see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations now looking at me, I will say to him that I hope it will not be many days before he will report the sundry civil bill. I think that will tend to hurry us along a little. I want to adjourn some time this summer, and not remain here until next fall, and I think we can do it if we shall have more voting and less talking.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to take up the internal-revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 329) to authorize the preparation and publication of a classified analytical and descriptive catalogue of all Government publications from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 300,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HALE, which was, after the word "act," in line 11 of the amendment of the Committee on Finance, proposed as section 4, to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause proper Dutch standards of sugar to be furnished for use in the collection of duties on sugar, and to declare by regulation the true saccharine strength which shall be equivalent to each number of such standard. And in any case where the strength of the imported sugar is, in proportion to its color, above the proper strength for that color by the Dutch standard, duties shall be charged according to the strength, and not according to the color.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont can now move that debate be limited.

Mr. HOAR. There is no such motion known to the rules.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that debate be limited on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. That cannot be controlled by a motion; it must be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FRYE. I think I shall have to object, as a Senator opposed to the amendment has occupied over an hour in discussing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection, and of course debate will not be limited.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I admit that I feel some interest in the amendment which has been proposed by my colleague to this bill, but my interest does not come from any local feeling whatever. I am not aware that there is a refiner in the whole State of Maine; I do not recall now a single importer of raw sugars in the State of Maine; and I do not know anybody especially interested in this question. My interest comes from the fact that for five years in the House of Representatives I have heard this very proposition to legalize the polariscope discussed. My interest comes from the fact that for two years on the Committee on Ways and Means I heard nothing but sugar and polariscopes, dry tests and wet tests, chemical analyses, and all that sort of thing, and day and night they were pouring in on to me little phials of sugars of various colors showing how frauds on sugar were committed, and I arrived at a conclusion from all the discussion I heard, and that conclusion was deliberately arrived at. It was first that the Secretary of the Treasury never had any right to establish a law fixing the duties upon sugar rather than the duties which the tariff law itself had fixed upon the sugars.

I arrived at another conclusion, that the conduct of the Treasury Department toward the refiners of sugar, honest and dishonest, was arbitrary in the extreme; that it compelled these men to pay, over beyond that which the law of the land required them to pay, $2,000,000 and upward, and held it in the Treasury of the United States for years until the Supreme Court of the United States declared that the Treasury Department had no right to enact laws establishing tariffs and duties.

I came to another conclusion, that the polariscope defrauded more honest refiners and importers than it protected the Treasury of the United States from frauds of dishonest importers and dishonest refiners.

I arrived at another conclusion, that there was no certainty in the polariscopic test at all; that the only earthly use of the polariscope is to have it in the hands of the buyer and in the hands of the seller as an assistant to them to arrive at some conclusion as to the saccharine strength in a given amount of sugar and they settle it by compromise.

But when the Government of the United States uses a polariscope it puts it into the hands of its agent, and that agent declares the result. There is no appeal; there is no escape; there is no compromise whatever. The man who has imported the sugar is compelled to pay precisely what the polariscope in the hands of that low-paid agent, as the Secretary said in one of his reports, determined. If that agent is faithful to the Government of the United States, if he participates in the feeling that the Secretary of the Treasury then held toward these refiners, if he believes with the Secretary of the Treasury that the greater part of them are defrauding the Treasury of the United States, and he is the faithful agent of the Treasury in detecting those frauds, I submit to the Senate of the United States, would not the polariscope in the hands of that faithful agent of the Government to detect fraud decide every time in favor of the Government and against the importer of the sugar? Do not Senators in the South know that the Treasury Department agents think that? Do we not in the North and in Maine, where we have an immense border line all on the north and the east of our State, know that the Treasury agents, the Treasury detectives, have but one side, and that is the Government side, unless somebody is dishonest enough to buy the agent and get him on his side?

In the hands of this agent of the Government, paid six or seven hundred dollars a year, the polariscope, if he is faithful to the Government, defrauds the honest importer and refiner of sugar more than the dishonest importers and refiners of sugar defraud the Government. If, on the contrary, the dishonest refiner bribes in any possible way that agent, with the polariscope in his hands, then the Government of the United States is defrauded out of what is its due, very much more largely than it is without any polariscope at all.

Sir, I do not think that the Secretary of the Treasury himself believed that a majority of the refiners of this country were engaged in a scheme to defraud the Treasury. There are some of the best men in this country, some of the proudest names in New York and Boston engaged in this very refining business. Surely the Secretary of the Treasury did not believe there was a combination of the refiners and of the importers in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston to defraud the Treasury. If there were men who defrauded it was the exceptional case and not the rule; but the Secretary of the Treasury, finding that there were frauds, instead of undertaking to provide against those frauds under the law which fixed the Dutch color as a standard for importations of sugar, put in a new provision of the polariscope, in order to determine what the frauds were, and then undertook to enforce it and did enforce it, and then came to Congress to ratify what he did. The Forty-fourth Congress refused to ratify, the Forty-fifth Congress refused to ratify, the Forty-sixth Congress refused to ratify. Once the Committee on Ways and Means reported in favor of the polariscope, and it went before the House of Representatives, was discussed for a week, and beaten by a large majority on the floor of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask my friend whether it is a fact—I believe it is—that from some cause or other the sugar refiners at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and perhaps Boston, have been sacrificed to a very large extent under the ruling?

Mr. FRYE. Before I get through I will come to that. The last Committee on Ways and Means could not be induced by all the Treasury agents, by the Secretary himself appearing before them again and again, by the agent for the Treasury Department sending out circulars every day and every hour of the day almost, to ratify and confirm the action of the Secretary of the Treasury, to establish the polariscope as a test. For five years the conflict has been going on in the other House of Congress and for five years the Secretary of the Treasury has been defeated at every turn.

Now, sir, it is proposed here right at the close of this session of the Senate, on this bill to reduce taxes, to accomplish that which the honorable Senator from Ohio has failed to accomplish after complete discussion, after exhaustive investigation in the other House during the last five years of time.

Sir, I said I was satisfied that the polariscope was not the test to determine. The polariscope, I said, cannot determine accurately the saccharine strength of sugar, and therefore it is utterly unsafe. There are grades above No. 13 Dutch standard, above No. 10, above No. 7, and at each grade under the law the tariff duty lifts up one-fourth of a cent. The refiners are content with a profit of one-eighth of a cent. If the polariscope on No. 7 sugar coming in in a cargo puts it up one degree, makes it just over 7, there is a quarter of a cent added to the duty and the profit is changed to a loss to the man who honestly imported that cargo. In the hands of a faithful man to the Treasury Department, trying to develop fraud, there is not any doubt that that degree will go up; it will never go down. In the hands of an unfaithful man, a man who is hired by the refiner, it will go down and the importer will save this one-fourth of a cent. I have some tests of the polariscope that I want the Senate to understand:

Suppose the Treasury Department puts the polariscope in the hands of one man employed at $600 or $700 a year, and puts him onto the Government wharf or onto the refiner's own wharf, and lets him with that polariscope determine a cargo of sugar, when the difference by that polariscope may be $10,000 on a cargo of sugar against the honest importer.

The Senator from Ohio says that this amendment is in the interest of the small refiner.

Mr. SHERMAN. The large refiner.

Mr. FRYE. I mean that the polariscope was in the interest of the small refiner.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; that is right.

Mr. FRYE. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that the effect of this process is to give an advantage to the large refiners as against the small ones, although I think nearly all the refiners were opposed to the use of the polariscope.

Mr. FRYE. That is most singular, because the king of all refiners in this country, the man who refines more sugar than any other man or concern in this country; the man who has made more money than nearly all the rest of them put together in refining sugar, Theodore Havemeyer, of New York, was the one man I ever heard of, out of all the refiners in New York, Boston, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, who asked that this polariscope be ratified by Congress. On the contrary, nearly every small refiner sent in his earnest remonstrance against the polariscope, and the complaint of the small refiners was that they would be driven out of the business absolutely by the use of the polariscope, and that Theodore Havemeyer and one or two others who owned their own wharves and their own docks and had all these inspections made on their own wharves and on their own docks, instead of on the Government wharves and Government docks, would be the men who would make all the money.

Now, I desire to say that to-day, when the Senator from Ohio is demanding this legislation on this bill, there is not a single refiner in New York, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, or anywhere else in this country; there is not a single importer of sugar in the whole country, there is not a single dealer in sugar in the whole country, there is not a single consumer of sugar in the whole country, except the Senator from Ohio, who is asking for that legislation. I understand that Theodore Havemeyer himself now declares against the polariscope, and is not asking that it shall be legalized in this bill or any other bill.

Mr. President, is it not a little strange when nobody on earth is asking for this legislation in this bill, the most important and intricate legislation too on the whole bill or in the whole tariff law, that at the close of the session the Senator from Ohio, who was Secretary of the Treasury when the polariscope was unlawfully adopted as a test, should be the only man who is trying to reanimate the thing into life?

Again, Mr. President, there is no class of men in this country, there is no refining interest, there is no importing interest asking to-day that the Dutch standard, as it is called, adopted by our tariff law without the polariscope, shall be the law of the land. The Dutch standard undoubtedly has gone by; the Dutch standard undoubtedly cannot be relied upon to-day. The Senator from Ohio was right when he said that the Dutch standard opened the door to fraud in the coloring of sugars. I have no question about that; but it is the only way to prevent that fraud this way which the Senator from Ohio demands shall be adopted, to-day when everybody else has declared against it.

Why sir, at the last Congress, in the House of Representatives, Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, and myself examined it with a great deal of care, and we came to the deliberate conclusion after thorough investigation that the Dutch standard making three degrees below 13 was not a proper standard, could not be enforced, could be evaded, that it was not in the interest of the consumer, it was not in the interest of the importer, it was not in the interest of the refiner nor in the interest of the Government, and we proposed a bill which I hold in my hand, striking out every grade below 13, and the Senator from Ohio will agree with me when I say that the frauds were below 13 and never above, that the chance for fraud above 13 is infinitesimally small, and that when you strike out the grades 7 and 10, and put on a single duty upon all sugars imported below 13 you stop all fraud and you have a tariff bill perfectly simple; then put on 2 cents a pound, and you will reduce the duty largely from what it is now; you will collect every dollar of it, and there will not be the slightest difficulty on earth. That bill is as follows:

A bill to regulate the duties on sugar and molasses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. That all tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice and melada, shall pay a duty of one cent and fifty hundredths of a cent per pound; that concentrated melada or concrete, and all sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, shall pay a duty of two cents per pound: above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, shall pay a duty of two cents and twenty-five hundredths of a cent per pound; above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard in color, shall pay a duty of two cents and sixty hundredths of a cent per pound; above No. 20 Dutch standard in color, and all refined loaf, lump, crushed, powdered, and granulated sugar, shall pay a duty of three cents and twenty-five hundredths of a cent per pound. Molasses five cents per gallon.

SEC. 2. That melada shall be known and defined as an article made in the process of sugar-making, being the cane juice boiled down to the sugar point, and containing all the sugar and molasses resulting from the boiling process, and without any process of purging or clarification. And any and all products of the sugar-cane imported in boxes, mats, baskets, or other than tight packages, shall be considered as sugar, and dutiable as such. And that sirup of sugar, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, or concentrated molasses, entered under the name of molasses, shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided, That the above schedule of duties shall apply to all goods hereinbefore described held in bond in warehouses, public stores, or on bonded wharves, at the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That of the drawback on sugars exported, allowed by section 3019 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, only 1 per cent. of the amount so allowed shall be retained by the United States.

SEC. 3. That at interior ports where there are no customs warehouses or public stores for the storage of imported goods in bond there shall be allowed on concentrated melado, or concrete, and on all cargoes of sugars imported before the passage of this act, and on hand in original packages at the time of the passage of this act, and upon which the duties shall have been then paid, a drawback equal to the difference between the amount of duties actually paid and the duties hereinbefore prescribed; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to ascertain the amount of such drawback and to facilitate the payment of the same.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein shall be construed to alter or repeal the act entitled, "An act to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and his majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands," signed on the 30th of January, 1875; which act was approved August 15, 1876.

Why does not the Senator from Ohio propose that as an amendment? The Senator from Ohio, in 1877, used this language in his report:

The Dutch standard is an unsatisfactory basis for the assessment of duty, founded as it is on color alone, which bears no definite relation to the value of the sugar. If, however, the Dutch standard is to be retained, it is recommended that the grades be reduced in number, so that there shall be but three rates of duty, one for sugars not above No. 13, one for sugars above 13 and not above 20, and another for all sugars above No. 20, including all refined sugars.

In another place, January, 1878, he said:

Unless the committee is satisfied that some sure test of sugar of No. 10 and below can be made, I still adhere to the recommendation made in my annual report:

That was the recommendation for one duty on all below No. 13.

But upon that question I think the committee has better means of deciding than I.

Again he said, in 1878:

It is deemed imperative that some change in the mode of collecting duties on sugar should be had, and it is preferred, as stated in the last report, that the duty should be at one rate on all sugars, up to a point which will exclude temptation either to color sugar for the purpose of reducing the duty, or to commit fraud by means of sampling and classification. The duties now are, to a large extent, dependent upon the fidelity of the sampler, one of the lowest-paid officers in the public service.

Again he said in a communication in 1879:

It is deemed imperative that some change in the mode of collecting duties on sugar should be had, and it is preferred, as stated in the last report, that the duty should be at one rate on all sugars up to a point which will exclude temptation either to color sugar for the purpose of reducing the duty or to commit fraud by means of sampling and classification.

So that the Secretary himself in 1877, in 1878, and in 1879 was urging what? This Dutch standard of color and the polariscope? No, he was urging this bill which stands here as the bill of Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, simplifying the duties on all below No. 13. I have no doubt that that would prevent all difficulty, prevent all fraud, at least to the extent that it is prevented in any other business of manufacturing, refining, or importing in this country. Again, there are to-day in this country refiners, importers, and consumers asking that that be adopted as the tariff on sugar. There are more refiners and importers asking that the ad valorem, as it is called, be the duty upon sugar. I have here before me a bill introduced by Mr. CANDLER, of the House, who himself is a sugar-man, fixing an ad valorem duty. Let me read it:

A bill to simplify and equalize duties on sugar and molasses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the —— day of ——, 188-, in lieu of the duties and rates of duties now imposed on molasses, melada, concentrated melada, tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, concentrated molasses, and sugar imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duties, that is to say: On all molasses, melada, concentrated melada, sirup of sugar-cane juice, tank-bottoms, concentrated molasses, and on all sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, 25 per cent. ad valorem; on all sugars above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, 35 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall by regulation prescribe and require that samples from packages of molasses, melada, concentrated melada, sirup of sugar-cane juice, tank-bottoms, and concentrated molasses shall be taken by the proper officers in such manner as to ascertain the true value of such articles, and that samples of sugars shall be taken by said officers in such manner as to ascertain the true color and value of such sugars.

All provisions of law inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

A 25 per cent. duty is enough to protect Louisiana or the beet-sugar interest of the country, and Mr. CANDLER says he knows of no difficulty at all, he knows of no chance for fraud, and this ad valorem proposition is supported by such gentlemen and houses as these: The Standard Sugar Refinery; Boston Sugar Refinery; Bay State Sugar Refinery; Cyrus Wakefield & Co.; Benjamin Burgess & Co.; Elisha Atkins & Co., of Boston; and I have read some of the best names in the city of Boston who never went into any raids on the Treasury of the United States about sugar or anything else. In New York all the refiners but two are in favor of an ad valorem duty. Almost the entire trade petitioned for an ad valorem tariff in the following words:

A bill for the levying of ad valorem duties upon sugar as embodying the only just and equitable system for an import tax on the article.

MOSES TAYLOR & CO.
HOWLAND & ASPINWALL.
A. A. LOW & CO.
E. D. MORGAN & CO.
AMSINCK & CO.
FABBIE & CHAUNCEY, and others.
BROOKLYN SUGAR REFINERY.
HAVEMEYER & ELDER.
F. O. MATTHIESON & WIECHEY SUGAR REF. CO., and others.

All the refiners in New York but two. They do not fix the rate of duty, but say unitedly they leave that to Congress and do not care what that is, so far as they are concerned. There are two propositions, one of them which the Secretary has indorsed over and over again; one of them which he says will absolutely prevent fraud; one of which he says is entirely fair, indorsed by some of the leading refiners in this country; for instance, in Boston by Benjamin Burgess & Co., as honest men as there are in the world, I know them personally; indorsed by gentlemen in New York who are engaged in the refining business, indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, indorsed by Mr. CARLISLE, believed in fully by me as the best method, after a complete investigation. There is that proposition, and then there is the other one of an ad valorem duty, indorsed by all but two refiners in New York and by nearly all of them in Boston. Now, why cannot the Senator from Ohio put that proposition which I favor or the other proposition of Mr. CANDLER into this bill instead of undertaking to confirm the doings of the Treasury Department in 1879 in resorting to the polariscope, which I think I have shown clearly is not to be relied upon?

I know the Senator will say that it is relied upon by men. I said yesterday what I desired to say about that. It is not relied upon by men. I say the purchaser and the seller take it for their convenience. They never agree; at least the figures which I have read to-day show that they never agree. They have the opportunity to compromise and come to an agreement in relation to it after they have approached it by the polariscope; but when the Secretary of the Treasury is making a raid on dishonest refiners, and all his agents are engaged with him in making the same raid, and the dishonest agent or the honest agent discovers what the polariscope says about a cargo of sugar, I ask you what opportunity there is for a compromise?

Take the case of Nash, Spaulding & Co., with one or two cargoes of sugar, honest men who bought it by the Dutch standard under the law as they had a right to do. It was an honest purchase by them. It was below No. 7 by the Dutch color. It was undoubtedly below No. 7 too by saccharine strength. They bought these two cargoes of sugar honestly. They bought them of an honest seller. It was No. 7 and under by the Dutch standard of color; it was not colored artificially in any way for the purpose of defrauding the Government; yet the Treasury polariscope was put to the two cargoes; it went a bit over seven, and thousands of dollars were added to the duties on those two cargoes of sugar, and they were compelled to pay the money under protest. It went into the Treasury of the United States; it lay there for two years. They begged and besought the Secretary of the Treasury to bring those cases to trial, and the refiners all over the country were urging that those cases might be tried, and that the question might be settled. They waited about two years, when they had a settlement and got their money back. I say that it never entered the head of the Secretary of the Treasury in my judgment that Nash, Spaulding & Co. were undertaking to defraud the Government of the United States. They are not the men who would undertake to do it.

The Senator proposes to make this the tariff law just as the fall sugar season commences; to make it take effect in October, right in the middle of it; and he says that he does not undertake to legalize the polariscope. He says that the section allows the Treasury officers in any way they please to determine what the saccharine strength of sugar is. Why is that any better than the polariscope? This month they will take the polariscope, next month they will take a chemical test, next month they will take a dry test and next month a wet test, and next month another test; and when all those tests vary from two to three and four degrees on the same cargo of sugar, ay, from one to five degrees on the same hogshead of sugar, I ask you where your refiners and your importers of sugar will be for the next six months' time until Congress meets again to repair the wrong? I ask you where the business of sugar refining and importing will be? I ask you where the relief to the people in taking off the 25 per cent. will be? They will seek for and find it not. The polariscope, as the Secretary says, increases the duties in almost every instance. Does it reduce dishonesty? No; because the Dutch standard of color made it so and that is the law, and the polariscope, disregarding the Dutch standard of color, increases it in every instance, and then the Treasury gets more. Who pays it? The people pay it; and here is a proposition in relief of the people to take off 25 per cent., and the Senator from Ohio and the Finance Committee handicap it with this proposition to adopt the polariscope, to break up the business of refining and importing largely for the next six months, to confuse all the business connected with it, and thus take from the people themselves the very help which this Senate and the House are undertaking to extend.

Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate. For the last ten days I have been terribly tired of hearing talk, and I have no doubt Senators are just as tired of hearing me talk. I have said all I desire to say in relation to the proposed amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish very briefly to answer some of the points of the interesting speech made by my friend from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] I will not go outside of the text he has given me. I will state some of the points he has made and answer them if I can. This is purely a dry business question, and I do not think it is necessary for either him or me to get very much excited about it.

The Senator says the polariscope in the hands of a poorly paid agent is a dangerous weapon. The whole process of levying taxes on imported goods is a dangerous process.

Mr. FRYE. I was quoting the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true, but I spoke of it in connection with another matter. The polariscope test is much less dangerous than any other.

The Senator announced before closing his remarks that he was in favor of an ad valorem tax, that is that the value of every cargo of sugar brought to our market must be ascertained by the custom-house officers. The same custom-house officers would levy the ad valorem tax that would apply the polariscope, and therefore it is much more dangerous when you come to deal with the customs duties levied by an ad valorem rate on every specific cargo, each one of which varies from the other, than when you are dealing with an instrument which cannot lie unless it is read wrong.

As I understand the process of the polariscope, they take a certain sample of sugar, reduce it to a liquid state, and apply an instrument which shows on its face like a thermometer the degree of saccharine strength. That process is simple enough. You may say you may make a thermometer lie as to the state of the weather. If you bring ice near it, it will make it lie. You may make the barometer lie very easily, and barometers may vary. The variation of the polariscope does not arise out of any defect in the instrument, but out of the defect in the sample. Take two samples from different hogsheads of sugar. It is known that the bottom is full of molasses, while the top is clear, the middle is about medium. If you take different samples and apply the polariscope to the different samples you will have different tests, and that may explain somewhat the difference between the polariscope applied by the owner of the sugar and the polariscope applied by a customs officer, and between the polariscope as applied to the bottom of a cask and as applied to the top. There is no more trouble in applying the polariscope than there is in applying any other instrument of that kind, and the fact that it is done by all other nations, it seems to me, ought to weigh something in the matter.

It is adopted in Holland. I had their law before me last night, and I intend to put it in the remarks I made yesterday to show you what Holland has done. In 1881 it adopted the very plan we propose in this bill in substance. The French have done it and with success, not to vary from the Dutch standard, but in order to preserve the Dutch standard and in order to prevent the adulteration or change from the Dutch standard in the ordinary process of manufacture.

We must trust some one in collecting duties, and we can certainly trust the officers of the Treasury Department in the application of the polariscope. We had two years of trial; it was in force two years. That Treasury order was enforced and was applied, and there was no trouble about it; there was no contest about it. No dispute was ever made as to its correctness. Of course any importer in New York might at any time dispute the accuracy of the polariscopic test, but it was never done and never varied. Even the quotations read by the Senator show that in the tests which were made the difference was only as to a portion of a degree, never as to a whole degree in the polariscope. There are 100 degrees, while in the Dutch standard there are 20 numbers. The variation between No. 7 Dutch standard and No. 10 Dutch standard is easily met by a little burnt molasses put in a pan in the process of manufacture.

But the Senator says that Mr. Havemeyer, the greatest refiner, was the only one who was in favor of adopting the polariscope. My recollection is that Mr. Havemeyer, together with most of the refiners and most of the dealers, as well as the Treasury Department, was in favor of a simplification of the grades of sugar. I was very strongly in favor of that, and recommended to Congress to put one specific rate of duty on all sugars below No. 12 or No. 10 Dutch standard. For two or three years I made that recommendation, but Congress did not listen to it because there was a controversy always between the home producers of sugar and the importer, and Congress could not be gotten to agree upon a bill. I think at one time the Committee on Ways and Means reported a bill, but the House disagreed with it. They could not deal with a question of this kind which was mixed up with other questions of the tariff. So, finally, in order to prevent plain and palpable frauds, the Treasury Department did issue the polariscope order. That order worked well until it was set aside by the decision of the Supreme Court.

As to the present opinions of Mr. Havemeyer or these refiners I do not know. When the Senator from Maine says that nobody is in favor of this except myself he is terribly mistaken. The tables of the House of Representatives were loaded with petitions from the refiners and from others engaged in the trade, some in favor of one thing and some in favor of another.

Mr. FRYE. Now?

Mr. SHERMAN. Now they differ widely.

Mr. FRYE. Any now in favor of the polariscope?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I never have seen them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will send to the Chair and have read a letter from the Treasury Department of recent date.

Mr. FRYE. I have no doubt about the Treasury Department being in favor of it. I was talking about outsiders.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; only two or three months since the decision of the Supreme Court took effect, and up to that time there was no complaint except by the importers of large cargoes and by the refiners. As a matter of course there are no petitions about any of these questions of taxation; but I will ask to have read now this report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury upon the subject, an opinion, I may say, written to a member of the House who introduced a proposition substantially similar to what is contained in this bill, and it is now pending and has been pressed constantly by him, but he could not get any action on it. He is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1882.

SIR: Your letter of May 22, inclosing a copy of a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt certain regulations to prevent the evasion of existing customs duties upon sugar, and asking for my views upon the subject, has been considered.

There seems to be urgent necessity for some legislation upon this subject.

The Revised Statutes, section 2504, imposing duties upon sugar, make the Dutch standard the test of quality. It is not doubted that this standard was adopted upon the theory that that color was a fair indication of the saccharine strength and value of the sugar, pure sugar being white, and the darker colors being due to the presence of molasses and some lesser impurities. The darker the sugar the less its saccharine strength and value.

Color was therefore a fair test of value so long as sugar was produced by processes intended solely for the production of the best article.

It was found, however, that either by omitting to extract the natural impurities of the sugar, or by adding artificial coloring matter, color has ceased to be a measure of value, and that sugars which, rated by their saccharine strength should pay a duty of $3\frac{7}{8}$ cents per pound, as being above No. 13, were paying a duty of $2\frac{5}{16}$ cents per pound, as being not above No. 7. In other words these sugars were paying $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound less than Congress intended.

This Department, on July 19 and September 2, 1879, instructed the customs officers in case of artificially colored sugars to look beyond the apparent color and classify the sugars according to what was assumed to be their real color; that is, the color which they would have borne if manufactured by ordinary processes, which was to be determined by their saccharine strength, ascertained by the polariscope.

In the case of Merritt vs. Welsh et al., the Supreme Court of the United States, at the October term, 1881, it was decided that these instructions were illegal, and that duties upon sugar should be collected upon the color standard, although it appeared that coloring matter was added on purpose to evade the duties.

In the opinion of the court it is said:

"The defendant offered to show that coloring matter, namely, molasses, was introduced into the vacuum-pan, or boiler, after the mass had been brought to the state of sugar, but before its final passage through the coolers and the centrifugal tubs, the last process through which it goes, but this evidence was also decided to be incompetent."

And again: "Great stress is laid on the charge that sugars are manufactured in dark colors on purpose to evade our duties. Suppose this is true, has not a manufacturer a right to make his goods as he pleases?"

The idea of the Department in issuing its instructions is well expressed in the opinion of one of the dissenting justices, in the case of Merritt vs. Welsh et al., as follows:

"A color imparted to sugar artificially, either during the process of manufacture or after its completion, and which it would not contract by means of any of the processes necessary merely to the production of sugar, is, in my opinion, not its natural color, and not the real and true color of the Dutch standard, however closely it may resemble it, or however impossible it may be by sight merely to distinguish it from the color of the sample. It is a mere imitation and counterfeit of the Dutch standard."

The amount which the revenue has suffered by the artificial coloring of sugar may be fairly measured by the amount paid and payable to importers as a refund for duties illegally collected between the date of said instructions, July 19, 1879, and the opinion of the court in October, 1881. This amount is estimated at about $2,000,000.

In obedience to the decision of the court the duties on sugar are now collected solely by the Dutch standard, according to their apparent color when imported. Cargoes of sugar are now coming in at the various ports at the lowest rates of duty, which if not artificially colored would pay the highest rates.

The expense of coloring centrifugals by adding burnt molasses to the sugars after granulation in the vacuum pan is merely nominal, and it is natural to suppose that under the opinion of the Supreme Court, the greater part of centrifugal sugars imported will pay the very lowest rate of duty until Congress shall provide some other test than the Dutch standard of color.

The evil effects of the present condition of the sugar tariff cannot be overstated. Not only is the manifest intention of Congress that sugars should pay in general a duty in proportion to their value utterly defeated but the system proposed is reversed, the centrifugals, which are the purest, being those which are artificially colored, while the muscovados, which are of a lower grade of purity, pay a higher duty.

Again: Importers are now compelled to become parties to this artifice or to retire from business, the profit made by the saving of duties on high grade centrifugals artificially colored being four times at least the profit made on those imported in their natural colors.

Another effect of the present state of this subject is, that the planters and other sugar makers of this country are denied the protection which the tariff was intended to afford them.

It may be added that there is no difficulty whatever in ascertaining the true saccharine strength of sugar as proposed in your bill by the methods universally adopted in the trade by both buyers and sellers.

The fact is patent to all that the prices current of sugars are fixed by their percentage of saccharine strength. By this standard they are advertised in the public prints of this and foreign countries, and by this standard their value for refining purposes is principally determined.

This subject deserves special attention in another aspect.

By section 3019, Revised Statutes, a drawback equal in amount to the duty paid on imported sugar is paid upon the product of such sugar when refined and exported, reserving 1 per cent. to the Government.

The rates of drawback upon such exported sugars have been prescribed by regulations of this Department. These rates are based upon the percentage of refined sugars, which it is ascertained is produced from each grade by the Dutch standard of color.

Now that sugars of the highest saccharine strength by artificial coloration are imported at the lowest rates of duty, the established rates of drawback are unequal and unjust to the Government, which in some instances has paid in drawbacks a sum largely in excess of the whole amount of duties collected upon an importation.

It is true the Secretary has power to establish new rates of drawback, but to do this justly he will be compelled to ascertain the saccharine strength of each importation of sugar, and by stringent regulations to identify its product when exported and allow the drawback accordingly.

This course would be attended by many practical difficulties, which would be manifest to importers.

By the proposed bill under which the duties upon imported sugar would be levied according to saccharine strength the regulations heretofore established for drawbacks would be sufficient.

Your bill is properly drawn to effect the objects proposed.

Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. R. L. GIBSON,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. That letter of the Treasury Department, written by Assistant Secretary French, shows the view of the Treasury Department on this subject; and it is not controverted, I believe, by any one here or elsewhere that the operation of the law as it now stands under the decision of the Supreme Court is to tax the poorest sugar higher than the best sugar; but its application in another respect is still more dangerous to the Treasury. The Senator from Maine says that the effect of the polariscope will be to advance the price of sugar to the consumer. Far from it; it does not affect the price of the sugar that is consumed by our people, that which enters into the domestic market; but what is now permitted induces an enormous drawback on that which is exported.

The artificially colored sugars which pay the lowest rates of duty are refined and exported, and the drawback on the exportation is greater than the amount of duty paid. That is shown by an extract that I might read from the letter of Mr. Chamberlin, who is a specialist on this matter, an agent of long standing, who gives instances where the importation of sugar at a certain rate, paying a certain duty, is converted into refined sugar and exported at a higher drawback than it paid duty, thus making an actual bounty out of the Treasury that is paid for the process of refining. The law gives to every refiner the right to a drawback of all the duties that he has paid on the sugar, but as that amount of drawback can only be ascertained by the condition of the sugar when it is exported, when it is put in a different condition from what it was when it entered into the refinery, as a matter of course it is impossible to get at the exact amount that has been paid on it and it can only be tested by the polariscope itself or by its then true color according to the Dutch standard.

I have cases here showing the practical operation of that. In one case sugar that had paid a duty equivalent to the rate on sixty-eight pounds of pure sugar was refined and produced ninety pounds of pure sugar, so as to enable the refiner to export the sixty-eight pounds on which he had paid duty and have twenty-two pounds of refined sugar over. That is manifestly unjust; but the Senator from Maine admits the whole of the argument away when he says that the Dutch standard is totally inapplicable to the present condition of affairs. The Dutch standard is wrong; it is no longer a test of value; it ought to be abolished; but how can you abolish it? Congress cannot agree. For four or five years Congress has been debating the subject and cannot agree upon any other standard than the Dutch standard. They have had all sorts of propositions made to them. The effect of this provision is simply to enable the Treasury Department, by such tests as it can apply by the use of the polariscope or any other test, to ascertain the saccharine strength of sugar and thus conform to the Dutch standard.

It seems to me amazing that upon a question of this kind there shall be any doubt or controversy. The decision of the Supreme Court, instead of being opposed to that view exactly and directly advised it, and says Congress would neglect its duty if it hesitated to correct this error. They say the Treasury Department had no power to correct it, and the courts have no power to correct it, but Congress may correct it, and now the appeal is made to both Houses of Congress. A bill similar to this is pending in the other House. At one time it was supposed to be acted on; now it is presented to the Senate, and I hope it will meet its approval.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the question of establishing a new basis for the sugar duty is a very large one. The article is used as universally as any other in this land excepting bread. Nine-tenths of the sugar supply of this country is imported, and last year it paid into the Treasury a revenue of $47,000,000. The amendment now before the Senate proposes to reduce those duties 25 per cent., and it is accompanied by a feature which only changes the effect of that amendment by providing for the use of a certain instrument for discovering the saccharine strength of sugars and making that the basis for the collection of duties. I do not propose to consider the wisdom of a reduction of the tariff on sugars, which now amounts to about 60 per cent. ad valorem, and if the reduction of 25 per cent. was made it would be still an ad valorem duty upon imported sugars of about 45 per cent. ad valorem. That is what it stood at in 1875, when the advance that obtains to-day and which is now sought to be repealed was made.

Since 1861 the Government of the United States have adopted as a test of duty the color of the sugar. They borrowed that test for the first time in our history from the Government of Holland. The Government of Holland having sugar-growing colonies, has introduced the test of color, and every few years that government causes certain samples carefully to be prepared; these are put in carefully sealed bottles, and they range from No. 5 to No. 20, being sixteen in number, and according to the color of the sugar that is brought in, tested by these samples in the sixteen bottles running from No. 5 to No. 20, the duty is laid.

That is the system which the Government of the United States twenty-one years ago adopted. For twenty-one years our duties have been collected upon the basis of the Dutch standard of color. When the Senator from Ohio became the Secretary of the Treasury he was not satisfied with that standard and with the law as he found it, and to speak plainly he made a law of his own, and he introduced a new test such as he now proposes to ingraft upon our present law as a means of ascertaining the saccharine strength of the sugar, and collecting the duty on this basis. The merchants who imported sugar protested in vain against his unauthorized act. They protested, however, under the form of law; they took appeals from his decision, and the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the merchants were right and that the Secretary was wrong, and that he had unwarrantably and illegally instituted a test for the exaction of duties which the law not only did not warrant but did forbid because it prescribed a wholly different system.

Now I ask the Senate to consider the effect of this amendment, so pressed by the Senator from Ohio; and I do not wonder that his pride of opinion, a very natural human sentiment, should urge him, I do not say to override, but wholly to destroy the result of the opinion of the Supreme Court and to triumph in the end over the merchants from whom he exacted these duties, and who have recovered them back from the Treasury. What is the effect of applying the polariscopic test and yet maintaining your basis of the Dutch standard of color? You are seeking to ingraft a wholly different principle and fixing the duties upon a basis utterly and entirely different from the new principle proposed. The Dutch standard is one of color alone; it is not one of saccharine strength. The polariscope is a test of saccharine strength alone and has nothing on God's earth to do with the color. See, therefore, what confusion, a confusion of terms, it is to maintain in the tariff laws a series of duties graded and based upon one test, which is that of color, and then control it by another test, which is that of saccharine strength. The two are inconsistent. You cannot ingraft one upon the other. If the polariscope shall succeed, the Dutch standard of color becomes worthless. If the polariscope shall fail, then the Dutch standard will stand as it has for the last twenty-one years the basis of exacting duties in this country.

Not only do I hold that there is an utter inconsistency in principle, in the nature of things, in ingrafting one test of saccharine strength upon another of color, but the proof before us, so far as I can get it—and I will agree that my opportunities have been by no means as good as I would desire, and that is not my fault; the subject has been brought upon us suddenly, without the opportunity of time to get that certain information which I say it is our duty to have before we decide—but so far as the best information and opinion that I can arrive at in this case, I would say that the polariscopic test is uncertain; it is variant. The same sugar on a wet day and the same sugar on a dry day under the polariscopic test will result in wholly different results that will put the sugar at a higher or lower rate as the case may be. I handed the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] yesterday a letter which is in the RECORD of this morning, addressed to me by some six of the leading importers and brokers in sugar in New York, men whose names are in the RECORD and are recognized as men of intelligence and high character, who sum the whole question up by declaring in the close of their letter that they have never known an instance at the port of New York where the Government tests were accepted as the basis of sales.

The Senator from Ohio said to me the other day in debate that he never had his test challenged. I knew nothing of the facts, but I did know something of the reasons and I could understand that there was no use in a man challenging the Government test. There was but one polariscope, and that was the official polariscope. He could not challenge the polariscopic test. He might appeal to the discretion, but he could not relieve himself from the power of the official that used it. So, while I admit that almost all the sugars of the world are bought and sold upon the test of saccharine strength ascertained by means of the polariscope, still each vender and each purchaser employs his own agent and his own instrument.

Frequently in the trade and almost always in the trade buyer and seller differ as to the degrees of the saccharine strength, and then the vender having his ascertained rate and the vendee having his ascertained rate the two come together and they make their voluntary bargain. Of course the importer cannot make a bargain with the Government. He is governed by the rigid law as it is declared by a single instrument. Therefore when you find as a fact that although men use the polariscope they supplement it by their own judgment and their own sense of self-interest and make their bargain according to what each believes to be the fact, and while that may be a very wholesome and a very fair and reasonable method of private bargain, you cannot adopt it as a principle for the imposition of duty, because all the reasons and all the facts that go to make it a reasonable test for a voluntary arrangement between citizens are absent when you come to consider it as a test and method of exacting duties under the law.

I received from Baltimore the day after my debate with the honorable Senator this letter from a very intelligent gentleman, a man of high character, who was engaged in importing sugar in that city until by the use of the polariscope and the systematic divergence between its results in Baltimore and in New York, the Baltimore business was ruined and the New York business has completely absorbed the trade. This is the letter:

BALTIMORE, July 15, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I understand that during the debate in the Senate yesterday on the proposed changes in the tariff on sugar, Senator SHERMAN asserted that the Government classification by polariscope had never been challenged, and that on account of their accuracy they were frequently relied on to fix values as between buyer and seller.

With regard to the latter point I can only say that I never heard of such a case, nor do I think it at all probable that such cases ever occurred, for the reason that the Government used what is called the "dry test," (evaporating every particle of moisture from the sample operated on,) whereas the commercial method is the ordinary or wet test, and there was consequently a wide divergence between two results. Mr. SHERMAN'S statement that the Government polarizations were never challenged may be correct, but the explanation is that every importer regarded the polariscope exaction as illegal and paid his duties under protest, in the confident belief that the courts would so decide as to cause their refund.

In seventy-seven cases of my own I frequently told the custom-house officials that I was quite indifferent as to how they classed the sugar by polariscope, as I had no doubt regarding its illegality, and they would have to refund all they exacted from me. My intercourse with other importers satisfies me that the general feeling was similar to my own. So it is easy to understand Mr. SHERMAN'S immunity from challenge.

Respectfully, yours,

W. A. PEROT.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

I give his name because I am satisfied that he would prefer having it given, and when I give his name it is not necessary for me to do more. He is a gentleman of established reputation, high intelligence, and thoroughly experienced in the business whereof he speaks.

If I am right in the position I have taken that this is a proposition to ingraft one basis of taxation upon a system totally inconsistent with it, then it is better for the Senate to decide at once between the adoption of the polariscopic test all through your tariff, doing away with your Dutch standard and falling back only upon a system of testing the saccharine strength to be ascertained by the polariscope, or continuing on the same basis you have had for twenty-one years.

If you do not act on the basis of saccharine strength, then you should give up the idea of the polariscope and insist on the rigid classification of sugars according to the Dutch standard. We get the samples I suppose taken every two years. The Government of Holland prepare their official samples for sugar every two years, and they being carefully ascertained, I suppose we receive them each time they prepare them for their own market, and can use them. One thing is certain, that under the Dutch standard of color, we have had twenty years' experience. The Dutch Government has had a very much longer experience. I have the impression—I do not speak positively—that the French importations are under the Dutch standard. It is the continental standard of Europe.

I do not myself mean, in the face of the facts, to vote now to change the whole basis of the law under which our sugar duties are ascertained and exacted. I can understand perfectly well how personal this question is to the Senator from Ohio, and I can understand how reckless the proposition is in relation to the people of the United States. When the question comes hereafter as to whether we shall reduce the duties on sugar to where they stood in 1875 upon the simple basis of the withdrawal of the 25 per cent. then imposed, we can vote understandingly. I do not say now how I shall vote on that, although I cannot but believe that an ad valorem duty of 45 per cent. is a very large and generous measure of protection.

Therefore it is that I shall not and cannot vote to adopt now, with the light which is before me and the opportunities of information which I have sedulously endeavored to obtain, to accept so varied, so uncertain a test as the polariscopic test as a basis for the duties on sugar. I hope the Senate will see the inconsistency of ingrafting such a test upon the color test. The two are wholly distinct in principle and in nature. If we are to have the test of color according to the standard of Holland, that we understand. If we are to have the test of saccharine strength according to the polariscope, that in a measure we may understand. But to frame a tariff by ingrafting the polariscopic test upon the color test seems to me to be absolutely incongruous and insensible, because when you take up the polariscope you discard the Dutch standard. The two have nothing to do with each other; they are wholly distinct. One is the sole test of color, and the other disregards color and takes wholly saccharine strength. Sugar may be as black as night; it pays then the lowest duty under the Dutch standard. It may be as black as night and yet it may be assigned to a high rate under the test of saccharine strength. Therefore the two are wholly inconsistent. They have nothing to do with each other. The attempt to blend one with the other, I say with all respect, is utterly incongruous; I will not use the word "absurd," but it is totally inconsistent and the one test must destroy the other.

There may be an advance in science; the application of instruments for polarizing light may develop that there may be an almost certain approach to accuracy; and whenever that comes, if the facts shall indicate that change in order that the importer shall be relieved from that worst vice of all law uncertainty as to what duty he is to pay, then I shall be rejoiced to assist as well as I may in framing the tariff law upon this great commodity that shall be ascertainable, invariable, equal, and just; and I do not think that any one of those results can be predicated of the present polariscopic test.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, we imported last year 1,857,000,000 pounds of sugar. That shows that there is about thirty-seven pounds consumed per capita among all the people of the United States, thirty-seven pounds for every man, woman, and child. That imposes a tax of at least 75 cents upon every man, woman, and child in the country, if not more. It is therefore of some importance that we should take off the 25 per cent. addition that was made in 1875 upon these duties. I think it is also important that we remedy the defect in the law, so that the sugars shall be dutiable according to their value. Under the present system the centrifugal sugars of Cuba and Porto Rico come here in competition with our sugars made in Louisiana, at a much lower rate of duty than sugars from Brazil, from China, and from the Indies. These lower grades of sugar pay nearly 20 per cent. more than the centrifugal sugars brought from Cuba and Porto Rico, because the centrifugal sugars are made in a manner that admits of discoloration, by which they defraud the revenue out of the amount of duty that was formerly imposed by the Dutch standard. It must be admitted, Mr. President, even by the Senator from Delaware, that the polariscope is the best test now known of saccharine strength, and that is one of the most important elements of the value of sugar.

If a provision had been proposed here by which sugars of the Dutch standard of No. 7, testing by the polariscope not over 87°, should be admitted at the lowest rate of duty, I think it would have been better perhaps than the present provisions of the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee; and then from No. 10 to No. 13 a different standard, that is that it should test not over 92° by the polariscope. But at all events this would be a subject of regulation by the Department. I have no idea but that it will be just and fair, and it is the best known test that we now have to apply.

There is another thing. At the present time nearly all the sugars that we import have to pass through the sugar refineries. We do not get sugar that does not have to be passed through the refineries before it reaches the hands of the consumer. I do not wish to oppress the sugar refineries, but I think it would be well if we had some means by which the ordinary sugars that are made in the best and foremost sugar countries abroad could come in here without having to pass through the refineries. I think it is but just to the 300,000,000 pounds of sugar that we make in this country that there should be some protection against this immense fraud, as I regard it, of having sugars so manufactured that their color indicates a value far below the real value. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have the vote on the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BECK. What is the amendment?

Mr. HALE. It strikes out the polariscope.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment is in line 11, after the word "act," to strike out the rest of the amendment of the Committee on Finance, in the words following:

AND the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause proper Dutch standards of sugar to be furnished for use in the collection of duties on sugar, and to declare by regulation the true saccharine strength which shall be equivalent to each number of such standard. And in any case where the strength of the imported sugar is, in proportion to its color, above the proper strength for that color by the Dutch standard, duties shall be charged according to the strength and not according to the color.

Mr. HALE. My amendment leaves the section with simply the 25 per cent. reduced.

Mr. HAWLEY. But a word; I shall not detain the Senate. I was inclined to vote against the motion of the Senator from Maine because my sympathies were with the Treasury Department in its attempt to execute the law of the land. The old Dutch standard of colors, resulting from the locality and the style of manufacture, and indicating the saccharine strength of the sugar, answered the purposes of trade; men imported and sold by them; but the United States Government came in and established six grades of duty according to six grades of sugar by the Dutch standard. What inevitably resulted from that? That the modes of manufacture were varied so as to give sugars colors adapted to the lower duties. That was to be expected. It was inevitable. But the Treasury officers were perfectly justified, in my opinion, in attempting to make those sugars pay duty according to their saccharine strength, which was the object in gauging them by the Dutch standard in the first place.

Now comes in the objection that the polariscope, the best known of the saccharine tests, is not precisely reliable. Quite so; but it is the best of all the tests to be applied; it is the best measure, and if we are to go on taxing sugars in six grades of saccharine strength, with six grades of duty, we shall be obliged to resort to the polariscope, as I say it is the best method of measuring the saccharine strength.

But it seems to me far wiser on the part of a government, when it finds itself face to face with difficulties of this sort, to change its law. To have six grades of strength and six grades of duty is to invite controversy. No matter what the manner of testing may be, we shall be in an eternal war with importers if we continue the six grades, no matter how we attempt to estimate them. Therefore I would say make fewer grades, not more than three classes of sugar, perhaps not more than two.

I am not disposed at present to continue this struggle with the importers. If we were obliged to continue the six grades, I would continue it, and I would insist upon the polariscope; but my hope is that the tariff commission will recommend to us some much simpler method of taxing sugar than the existing one. If they do not, if they say it is best to attempt to tax sugar according to its value in six grades, then I shall vote for the polariscope, or any other good method of testing the saccharine strength, the polariscope notably the best as it stands now. Just at present there is a sort of lull in the controversy by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court, and the importers are paying the duties pretty much in their own way. I am quite willing to let this alone for a few months, rather than embark in another bitter fight with all the importers, and it is as well to drop the polariscope till we shall be able to establish the matter on some permanent foundation.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Connecticut seems to think that we are merely making a little preliminary movement here; that the real question of the reduction or the proper condition of the sugar tax is to be remitted until the final action of the tariff commission.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me explain to the Senator before he goes any further. I am heartily in favor of a reduction, of taking off the 25 per cent. duty, most heartily in favor of it. It is only upon renewing this fight about the polariscope that I hesitate.

Mr. BECK. I believe in making a reduction on sugar, but I propose, if I can, to reduce it in a way that shall be permanent, and not subject to change in six months because of some subsequent report; and for that reason I have given notice of an amendment, which I hope will receive favorable consideration, which will be found in the RECORD of Thursday, July 20, 1882, reducing all tariff duties that are above 50 per cent. ad valorem now to that rate. The sugar duties, as I see by Schedule G, are all above 50 per cent. now, and we import $8,785,579.42 of sugars not above No. 7; we import $33,086,299.54 above No. 7 and not above No. 10; we import of above No. 10 and not above No. 13 $4,016,173.35; of above No. 13 the imports are merely fractional, amounting to very little, if anything. The recapitulation shows that while we received for the year ending June 30, 1881, $46,321,781.14, a reduction to 50 per cent. would be a reduction of $4,602,164.53. Let me present the schedule again in tabular form.

SCHEDULE G.—Sugars.

Articles.	Average ad valorem rate of duty.	Amount of duty received.	Estimated loss of duty.
Sugar, Dutch standard in color:	Per cent.
Not above No. 7	57.06	$8,785,579 42	$1,087,707 42
Above No. 7 and not above No. 10	54.95	33,086,299 54	2,978,095 86
Above No. 10 and not above No. 13	57.01	4,016,173 35	493,835 65

Above No. 16 and not above No. 20	92.45	497 29	228 35
Above No. 20 and all refined, loaf, lump, crushed, powdered, and granulated	58.46	$934 95	$135 30
Sugar candy and confectionery:
Not colored	132.99	3,707 65	2,313 67
Molasses concentrated, tank bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, and melada	53.82	385,028 40	27,349 40
Total Schedule G		46,321,781 14	4,602,164 53

Why would not a reduction of these duties down to 50 per cent. ad valorem get clear of many of the frauds that are now complained of in regard to false coloring, and the polariscope, which operates in one man's hands in one way and in another man's hands in another, depending very often on whether it is his interest to see that the sugar is darker or lighter or has more or less saccharine strength? If we are going to make an effort to reform taxation, it seems to me that the way to do it is to fix on a basis reasonably fair.

The ad valorem can be ascertained on sugar, perhaps, more easily than in any other article. Give the officer in charge a right to use any appliance he may see fit. I believe that most of the fraud we suffer from grows out of the complications of the tariff. Now all sugar from No. 7 to No. 10 Dutch standard has one rate; from No. 10 to 13 another; and by the artificial means they have of coloring they can make sugar appear anything they please, and the man who holds the polariscope will make it appear anything he pleases. Reduce the duty to 50 per cent. ad valorem at the same time that you reduce all other things that are above that rate to that rate, and you will have enough protection, it seems to me, to satisfy the people of Louisiana and obtain a revenue almost equal to what is obtained now.

The ad valorem tax, I should judge from the statement I have referred to, would be about on the great mass of the sugar of which $33,000,000 worth were imported out of $46,000,000, would be at the present duties 54.95 per cent. Some of it is 57 per cent.; some of it 92; some of it, as sugar candy and confectionery, as high as 132 per cent. A reduction to 50 per cent. would only take $4,600,000 from the revenue, and would make as near a fair reduction as we could possibly make.

It is suggested that the tariff commission will look into this. They are in session; they are made up, of course, of the men who are looking out for the protected interests. This bill has seen fit to attack only one interest and that is the sugar interest, and does it on the ground that it is simply removing the additional taxation placed on sugar by the act of 1875. If you are going to reduce in good faith all the taxation imposed in 1875 back to what it was in 1872, why do you not embrace the iron, the cottons, the woolens, and the other interests that were increased 10 per cent. in 1875 back to what they were in 1872, as well as take the sugar tax and increase it? Is it not as fair, is it not as much for the interest of the people that the tax on iron, steel, and other things should be reduced as that the tax on sugar should be? We are receiving from sugar $47,000,000 of revenue. From many of these other articles on which 10 per cent. was imposed in 1875 we are receiving almost nothing, the duty being almost prohibitory, and the tariff commission is appointed in the interest of these men, and what is the argument? Go on with your reduction of sugar, and although we take off this 25 per cent. it is simply restoring it to what it was in 1872; we are to cry "cheap sugar" as we did "cheap coffee," and this is not to be the end of the tax on sugar.

You propose to reduce the tariff on Bessemer steel from $28 to $20 a ton, that not having been put up in 1875, and it will be claimed that that is the judgment of Congress as to what is the proper reduction of the steel duty, and you cannot go any further. As to sugar, Congress, it will be said, has only taken off what it put on in 1875; therefore go on and take off more, but as to Bessemer steel Congress has declared that $8 a ton is all the reduction required; that was not raised in 1875 specifically, and therefore you are bound by that.

This is a mere pretense to give instructions to the commission thus organized to affect the tax on the only interest the planters of the South have in the whole tariff. That is the meaning of it. I am willing to reduce the tax, but I will vote against reducing it 25 per cent. as an article singled out solitary and alone, with all the other things left to the tariff commission, and this still to go on to be subject to a further reduction. I will vote to reduce the tax on sugar as part of a general system taking 10 or 20 per cent. from everything. I will vote to reduce everything that is above 50 per cent. to 50 per cent.; but much as I desire to reduce the duty on sugar I do not intend to be led by any false pretense into an attack upon one solitary thing that is paying nearly one-third of the revenue, and which is to be still further attacked by a packed tariff commission.

I will go as far as any one in the way of making proper reductions. I am in favor of simplifying the system. Take away your Dutch standard; remove your polariscope test; make the duty ad valorem; if 50 per cent. is too much, make it 40; if 50 per cent. is too little, make it 60. Fifty per cent. will reduce the burden $6,000,000. Bring the other things to that and the people of this country will be saved $100,000,000 to $150,000,000.

I agree very much with what a distinguished New England gentleman wrote to me some time ago on another question that comes in very well here. It contains a good many of the views I entertain and I will read what he says in a moment.

I have two amendments, one reducing the sugar and other schedules down to 50 per cent., a reasonably fair reduction. Last Thursday's RECORD shows what taxes are now over 50 per cent. and what will be the effect of the reduction. Then there is an amendment which was offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] yesterday morning removing 10 per cent. now and 10 per cent. more from the 1st of January next.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not yet seen any amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky which proposes to change the manner of determining the standard.

Mr. BECK. If you reduce the duty to 50 per cent. ad valorem then you abolish all standards and you have no occasion for colors or polariscopes.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Ohio suggests that you will have as much difficulty in determining the value as you have now in determining the saccharine strength.

Mr. BECK. Then it depends on the invoice. Each man will watch the other man's invoice, and if there is undervaluation of sugar there will be as much opportunity to detect it as undervaluation in any other article. It is as easy a thing to detect it in sugar as in anything else.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the value of the sugar would be determined by the invoice?

Mr. BECK. It would be determined by the invoice, and the collector would determine whether the invoice was honest or not.

Mr. MORGAN. And that under existing law?

Mr. BECK. That can be done under existing law without any sort of trouble, simplifying it, making it clear, and making it easy of ascertainment, removing the complications of the system and the enormous taxation that is giving us more trouble than all else.

I propose to read a portion of a letter written to me about other things by a very distinguished gentleman, whose name I do not care to give, who puts the case very well. I hope the Senator from Alabama will listen to it:

The advocates of civil-service reform are rapidly becoming convinced that no system of competition examinations, no legislation in regard to the mere appointment to office, no superficial measure of dealing with the question, will meet the difficulty until the laws are altered which cause the corruption and lie at the very foundation of the disease.

No matter what party is nominally in power or what method of appointment may be adopted, is it possible to assume that fraud and corruption will not be continued so long as the present tax on whisky of 90 cents per gallon is maintained; the cost of producing whisky not exceeding 20 cents per gallon?

The revenue from whisky at the rate of 90 cents per gallon is but little more than it was at 50 cents per gallon. Is it to be assumed that a much larger population consumes less whisky? Or is it to be assumed that fraud has increased?

Can the tax on tobacco be honestly and adequately collected when it amounts to much more than the average cost of its production?

Can any method of selection prevent custom-house appraisers being color-blind when a variation of but a shade in the Dutch standard of color, by which the duties on sugar are assessed, may make or mar the profits of a ship load?

Can fraud be prevented when a little more or less molasses on the outside of the crystals of a sugar which is very rich in saccharine matter places it at a low grade and subjects it to a low valuation for the assessment of the duty?

Will the weighing scales of the appraisers ever be just in deciding upon the rate of duties to be imposed upon worsted goods when the difference of a shade of blue or brown makes the goods just enough heavier to turn the scales and add a large charge to the assessment of the duty? Will not some scales always blind the eyes of the appraisers in order that only the light colors may be weighed?

What safety can there be for an honest collection of the duties when the misplacement of a comma in the tariff section of dried fruits made a difference of hundreds of thousands of dollars upon the amount of revenue?

Why are there few or no American houses engaged in the importation of European silks?

Are not the laws themselves at fault which can only be enforced with the aid of spies and informers, bribed to treachery and perjury by a share of the base profits from the fines imposed?

No matter if the system has in some measure been altered and some of its more gross abuses removed, the subtle vice still endures and will corrupt any civil service at any and all times.

Just so long, Senators, as you have your Dutch standard Nos. 7 to 10 and Nos. 13 to 16, and polariscopes and men to hold them as it is their interest to hold them, you will have fraud and corruption in the collection of this great revenue. Make it ad valorem, call it 50 per cent. I believe a general reduction to 50 per cent. would be satisfactory to all the people who are producers of sugar, for we only produce 12 or 15 per cent. of what is consumed in this country, and it is one of the largest revenue articles. Simplify it, bring it down, remove all these artificial tests which are easily evaded, and let each importer watch every other, and the Government can apply all the tests and determine whether there is danger in that regard.

I do not say that I will vote with the Senator from Maine to strike out this provision, but, then, I will vote against the proposed reduction of 25 per cent. except as part of a system, because I believe that the proposition now is to attack this single interest and to attack it still further hereafter, and to leave thousands and thousands of greater abuses in the shape of the duties on Bessemer steel and cotton goods, and buttons, that I called attention to yesterday, and woolen goods, and other things in the hands of a friendly commission organized to maintain them, and simply to attack this single interest, and to double up the tax on cotton-ties, for that is all the committee could find worthy the attention of Congress now. I shall vote against all these propositions now, but I intend to reduce. I do not mean to be understood in voting against the 25 per cent. reduction that I am not in favor of reduction. I am against selecting out and attacking a single interest. If it comes in at all let it come in to be reduced as others are, and not be reduced here now, and then reduced further by the commission while other things are to remain, to be protected by that same commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this question, but I desire to say a word or two in regard to this amendment before the vote is taken.

This whole discussion goes to show the importance of the question and the difficulty of adjusting it. I had hoped and I still hope that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance to reduce the tariff on sugar 25 per cent. will not be adopted. It seems to me that the reasons so forcibly given by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] are sufficient of themselves; but fearing that it may be adopted, hoping, as I have said, that it will not be, because it strikes, singling out by itself, at one of the largest and most important industries of the country, still I feel that the committee amendment in regard to this test will go far to relive us of the great hardship that will be imposed on us in the event that the amendment reducing the tariff on sugar 25 per cent. should unfortunately be adopted. I shall perhaps later appeal to the Senate not to adopt the amendment as a whole, but rather to leave the whole question to the commission recently appointed for the purpose of revising the tariff in regard to this and all other articles.

Under the circumstances I feel bound to vote for that part of the amendment of the committee which relates to this test, believing, as I have said, that it will be a relief to us in case there should be a reduction of the duty.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GROVER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 34, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] but I transferred the pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

Mr. HARRIS. I now ask that my amendment to the section be reported.

Mr. FRYE. Is the Senator's amendment to strike out the section? I want to perfect the section before that vote is taken.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the amendment of the Senator from Maine will be in order.

Mr. FRYE. In section 4, line 1, after the word "that" I propose to strike out the words "on and after the first day of October, 1882." If this reduction was made and took effect October, 1882, it would be right exactly in the middle of the fall business of the whole refining interest, and so far as I have had any information from the refining interest they prefer very much that it should take effect on the passage of the act or at least not later than one month. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to that. Is there any objection to putting it on the 1st of September or to leaving it without any date at all so as to make it go into effect on its passage?

Mr. MORRILL. All our investigations went to show that the 1st of October would be more satisfactory than any other date we could fix, although we find that different interests have a different idea; that is to say, that while the amendment of the Senator from Maine would suit well enough those who are importing sugar and refining it, it would not suit and would be very oppressive to large dealers who have stocks on hand.

Mr. FRYE. Would the chairman of the Committee on Finance be satisfied to put the date of the section going into effect on the 1st of September instead of putting it off to the middle of the sugar season?

Mr. MORRILL. I only say that after a full and complete investigation of the communications received we reached the conclusion that the 1st of October was the fairest time we could designate. The Senator must be aware that there is a great deal of sugar in the hands of dealers who ought to have time to get rid of it.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to one other amendment which I propose to offer. After the word "act," in line 11 of this section, I move to insert:

And this reduction shall apply to all sugars and molasses which have since importation been in the uninterrupted custody of the Government in bonded warehouse.

Is there any objection to that?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, because we have provided—

That the reduction of duties provided for by this act shall also apply to all goods, wares, and merchandise on deposit in warehouses or public stores on the 1st day of October, 1882.

That is as far as we ought to go.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know but that that covers it. I did not see that when I suggested my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not cover the Senator's case fully, but it covers all we ought to cover.

Mr. FRYE. If the sugar has been in the uninterrupted possession of the Government up to that time, it will cover it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where the duties are paid we never refund. If the refiners choose to keep their goods in our warehouses for their convenience after they have paid the duties, it is no reason why we should refund the money. If they had taken out the goods and kept them in their own warehouses, we would not refund the money.

Mr. FRYE. Suppose they had paid the duties and the goods were in warehouse on the 1st of October, would not the money be refunded?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that clause applies only where they are in warehouse subject to duty.

Mr. FRYE. I will withdraw the amendment if the committee have satisfied themselves that the 1st of October is the better time, and I am content to let the section go as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 4 now remains down to the word "act" in line 11. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves to strike out the entire section and insert in lieu thereof what will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That all taxes and customs duties imposed by laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1884.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this bill as reported from the Committee on Finance proposes to reduce the duties on sugar 25 per cent., on Bessemer-steel rails from $28 to $20 per ton; and these are the only two articles in the whole list of articles upon which impost duties are imposed by existing law that are relieved.

I believe it is admitted upon both sides of the Chamber that the present rates of duty imposed by existing law are excessive and should be reduced.

By my amendment, instead of singling out two articles upon which a reduction is to be made, I propose a moderate reduction, not one equal to the demands of justice and the necessities of the country in my judgment, but a moderate and gradual reduction upon all articles on which impost duties are imposed.

In respect to the inequalities in certain articles, if Senators see proper to undertake to correct those in these expiring hours of the session, by separate and distinct amendments they can reach the special cases; but I think every consideration of justice and propriety demands that we should now, at this time and by this method, undertake the gradual and the moderate reduction that my amendment proposes, and instead of reducing revenue, in my judgment, the reduction, if there be a reduction at all, will not be perceptible. Indeed, I think the amendment if adopted will more likely increase revenue than diminish it.

I desire to take up no time in the discussion of the question.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if his amendment means 10 per cent. of the present duties or 10 per cent. ad valorem on the articles?

Mr. HARRIS. It is 10 per cent. of the present duties imposed by existing law, to take effect on the 1st day of January next, and an additional 10 per cent. to take effect on the 1st of January, 1884.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to this proposition. It looks a good deal like attempting to make a reduction without knowing exactly what we are trying to do.

To illustrate the proposition, suppose that on some articles the tariff rate is too high and on other articles too low; you reduce the rate on an article where it is too low the same as you reduce the rate on an article where it is too high. You never can get at any equality of tariff rates in that way.

This is only of a piece with the legislation we had a few years ago when it was the fashion to increase the salaries of the clerks 20 per cent. or 10 per cent. This is the same thing precisely. Where a clerk received a thousand dollars a year you increased his salary 10 per cent. That might be just so far as he was concerned, but where a clerk received $2,500 a year you increased his salary 10 per cent. when he was receiving at that time perhaps too high a salary and the other one too low a salary.

So there is no equalization in it. There is no justice in that kind of a decrease or increase. It does not work an equality, but works just exactly the opposite, and I must say that I am a little surprised at a proposition of that kind.

That is all I desire to say. I merely wished to call the attention of the Senate to the proposition to reduce on every article 10 per cent., whether the rate is too high or too low.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think the Senator from Illinois will undertake at this late day of the session to go through article by article and undertake to determine exactly how great the outrage is that the present law may work with respect to some, or exactly how near the present law approximates to justice in respect to others. This leaves the system as it stands, with a reduction of 10 per cent. per annum for two years, resulting in a reduction of 20 per cent. on the 1st day of January, 1884.

We certainly have not time to go through the entire list of articles upon which duty is imposed. It is wholly impossible for us to undertake to do that now, but I imagine the Senator from Illinois, as every other Senator on this floor, will agree that the present rates of duty are excessive and unnecessary, that they ought to be reduced. That they ought to be reduced, to be sure, with more care, with more investigation, and with more knowledge than we can possibly bring to bear upon the question at this hour, I am quite satisfied; but this is the only method and the most just method by which we can reduce generally, and I am wholly opposed to singling out two articles that are singled out in this bill as the objects of relief. I think there are very many articles that deserve it very much more than the article of sugar; and perhaps than the article of Bessemer steel none deserves a reduction more.

Mr. LOGAN. This 25 per cent. that is reduced on sugar was put there for a specific purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. Every article in the whole tariff system was put there for a specific purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking about the particular 25 per cent. which was placed on sugar for a specific purpose; that was for the aid of the sinking fund, at a particular time. The time having arrived when it is not necessary any longer, the proposition is to take off that particular 25 per cent. placed on it for that purpose.

Mr. JONAS. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONAS. I would suggest that in the same act 10 per cent. was put upon every other article in the tariff list.

Mr. HARRIS. My amendment takes off the 10 per cent. additional duties.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator says it is fair. I say that of all the ways which can be devised that are unfair the most so is to increase the tariff 10 per cent. or 20 per cent. all around, or to reduce it 10 or 20 per cent. all around. Take the article of wool for instance. On that one article perhaps the Senator may think the tariff too high, while others think it too low; and a percentage is taken off that particular article when it is not desirable that it should be done; but 10 per cent. is to be taken off because, forsooth, Bessemer steel is too high. That is not a fair way to legislate.

So you might take many other articles where really the tariff is not too high, but in fact too low, and still you reduce the duty on those articles 10 per cent. merely for the purpose of reducing 10 per cent. on that which is too high.

I say, further, that I did not know that any person intended on this bill to go into the general tariff system of this country for the purpose of reducing or increasing duties. If so, it seems to me perfectly useless for us to have appointed the commission we have created at an expense of thousands of dollars for the purpose of examining into the question and reporting what articles would bear reduction best and what the least, and reporting the amount all could bear, what they ought to bear, &c. Having done that, then we go to work and take off 10 per cent. this year and 20 per cent. another year. Taking off 20 per cent would be perfectly ruinous to some of the interests concerned in the tariff.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word in regard to this amendment. The Senator from Illinois speaks of this as though it was an unheard-of thing, and characterizes it as an outrage.

Mr. LOGAN. No, I did not say it was an unheard-of thing. I said it was like former legislation, and illustrated it by what we had done in reference to the salaries of the clerks time and again. I can remember when it was done. It has been done several times in Congress. It is not an unheard-of thing by any means, but a very unjust thing.

Mr. BECK. We had a tariff that was increased twelve or fourteen times from 1861 to 1868, under the lead principally of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] then chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House; and nearly each increase made during the war, bringing it from an average of about 19 per cent. to 48 per cent., stated on its face that it was a temporary increase of the duties on imports rendered necessary because of the oppressive internal taxation that had been imposed. Everything was increased time and again, and the acts read "an act temporarily to increase the duties on imports," beginning with "whereas it has been important and necessary to impose a tax of 5 per cent. on manufactures, therefore this increase must be made."

License taxes were imposed, taxes on income; and to compensate the manufacturers for the taxes thus imposed, these various increases of the tariff were made until the tariff became oppressively high on all interests. That condition of things began to change in 1868 and 1869 and we removed the tax upon manufactures of 5 per cent., but we did not remove the 10 per cent. additional tariff that was placed on the articles to compensate them for the 5 per cent. tax. We put 35 per cent. duty on raw wool and then put an additional duty on the manufactured article to compensate for it; and so with a thousand other things.

We removed the income tax which was said to be oppressive on our people in competition with other people, but the tariff remained. The internal burdens were removed; the tax on distilled spirits, tobacco, and a few stamp taxes on banks and matches and the other things that you are now repealing, alone remained; but the tariff increase still remained. This injustice became so apparent that in 1872 a Republican Congress, under the lead in the House of Representatives of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and in the Senate under the lead of the two distinguished gentlemen from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] passed this act which the Senator from Illinois seems to regard as so bad, if not unheard-of, so utterly indefensible; it bears date June 6, 1872:

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of August, 1872, in lieu of the duties imposed by law on the articles in this section enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise in this section enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, 90 per cent. of the several duties and rates of duty now imposed by law upon said articles severally, it being the intent of this section to reduce existing duties on said articles 10 per cent. of such duties, that is to say:

On all manufactures of cotton of which cotton is the component part of chief value.

On all wools, hair of the alpaca goat, and other animals, and all manufactures wholly or in part of wool or hair of the alpaca, and other like animals, except as hereinafter provided.

On all iron and steel and on all manufactures of iron and steel, of which such metals or either of them shall be the component part of chief value, excepting cotton machinery.

On all metals not herein otherwise provided for and on all manufactures of metals of which either of them is the component part of chief value, excepting percussion caps, watches, jewelry, and other articles of ornament: Provided, That all wire-rope and wire strand or chain made of iron-wire, either bright, coppered, galvanized, or coated with other metals, shall pay the same rate of duty that is now levied on the iron-wire, of which said rope or strand or chain is made, and all wire-rope and wire strand or chain made of steel wire, either bright, coppered, galvanized, or coated with other metals shall pay the same rate of duty that is now levied on the steel wire of which said rope or strand or chain is made.

On all paper and manufactures of paper, excepting unsized printing paper, books, and other printed matter, not herein specifically provided for.

On all manufactures of India rubber, gutta-percha, or straw, and on oil-cloths of all descriptions.

On glass and glassware, and on unwrought pipe-clay, fine clay, and fuller's earth.

On all leather not otherwise herein provided for, and on all manufactures of skins, bone, ivory, horn, and leather, except gloves and mittens, and of which either of said articles is the component part of chief value, and on licorice paste or licorice juice.

The Senator from Illinois was a member of the House as well as myself at the time that was done; and if he ever entered a protest against that reduction of 10 per cent. I never heard it, and the record will fail to show that he did, in my opinion. He acquiesced in it; and that reduction, small as it was, was a step in the right direction. It was delayed till long after the onerous burdens of internal taxation had been removed in consequence of which the tariff was increased in 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, under the different acts passed for that purpose; and when that was done and the 10 per cent. was taken off, it was proved and proved very conclusively on the floor of the House of Representatives by the ablest men, notably Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, now Director of the Mint, that the people were relieved from taxation to an amount of over $270,000,000, whereas the actual reduction of duty received by the Government was less than $40,000,000. The revenues went up by the reduction; the relief was great and the revenues increased. That went on from 1872 to 1875. Then a pretense was made that the sinking fund was in danger, and I hold in my hand the act then passed, entitled "An act further to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government," approved March 3, 1875, section 4 of which provides—

That so much of section 2503 of the Revised Statutes—

Which is the act I have just read, of June 6, 1872—

as provides that only 90 per cent. of the several duties and rates of duty imposed on certain articles therein enumerated by section 2504 shall be levied, collected, and paid, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the several duties and rates of duty prescribed in said section 2504 shall be and remain as by that section levied, without abatement of 10 per cent. as provided in section 2503.

So that the provision moved by the Senator from Tennessee is simply to do what the Senator from Illinois says it is perfectly right and proper to do on sugar which, by section 3 of the act of 1875, had 25 per cent. added to it. This amendment is simply to provide that the duties which were imposed in 1875 shall be removed and that the act of 1872 shall be restored. If it is right to repeal section 3 as to sugar, where is the wrong in repealing section 4 as to woolens, cottons, iron and steel, and all the manufactures thereof.

If there is to be fair dealing all around, why should not that act of 1875 be repealed as to all its increases? Has any condition of things sprung up since then which prevents that from being done? Are not the revenues of this country in a much better condition than they were then? Are not all the industries of the country much more fully employed? Is not the money of the country gold and silver coin now, instead of being at a discount as it was then; and then it was part of the cry why high duties should be kept up that our people had to sell in a depreciated currency? No reason remains except that the men who obtained that legislation of 1875 want to hold on to it. It did not protect the sinking fund; it did not increase the revenues, but in two years it involved a loss to the revenues of $29,000,000 instead of the increase that it was predicted it would bring. Let the tariff be restored to what it was in 1872 as the least possible relief that anybody can wish ought to be given; and then a year from now, unless by subsequent legislation changes are made, let 10 per cent. additional be taken off.

I have no idea that the 10 per cent. removed on the 1st day of January next, and the 10 per cent. proposed to be taken off on the 1st day of January, 1884, afford anything like the amount of reduction that ought to be made in justice to the consumers and the producers in this country; but it is a step in the right direction, restoring the legislation of 1872, and effecting a reduction of 10 per cent. more, and if the tariff commission shall devise anything between now and then that will be of any value to us it can be considered when it is presented.

I merely desired to say this much in answer to the Senator from Illinois. I do not propose to argue the case. I have heard no good reason given why the reduction should not be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been called for on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illinois says in substance that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is a most unjust way of reducing the tariff. If that be true, it is because the present tariff is an unjust tariff. If it is unjust to reduce it 10 per cent. it is unjust to levy 100 per cent., for the theory of the present tariff bill is left intact; it is not changed in the slightest degree. Suppose it was justly and properly levied at a time when the amount it realizes was necessary for the support of the Government; that time has passed by, and we need less money now than we needed then, and we can afford to reduce the taxes. If your theory be correct which has been held up to us as a monument of wisdom that has built up this country to what it is, then the theory of a horizontal reduction is absolutely correct, and no man who favors the present tariff bill and who admits that the tariff is now too high but must logically and consistently admit that the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee is absolutely correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senate have said that they are willing to allow a practical bounty of about $1,000,000 to sugar importers over and above the amount of duties they pay, I want to place on record, which I did not do in the first place, for I did not want to introduce names, the particular cases where these bounties have been paid, taken from the Treasury records.

In one case, on a shipment of sugar by the steamer City of Vera Cruz, from Havana, Havemeyers & Elder being the importers at New York, November 28, 1879, the amount of duty they paid was $37,139.97. They refined that sugar, and under the law they got their drawback on it to the amount of $45,833.49. That is, they received from the Treasury of the United States over and above the amount of duty they had paid on the sugar $8,693.52. That is legalized by the act of the Senate.

I will give another case, where the importer was S. W. Welsh, of New York, the gentleman who was the party plaintiff in the suit decided in the Supreme Court. "Per brig F. J. Lancaster, from Cardenas; S. W. Welsh importer; New York, September 18, 1879," on 1,928,500 pounds the duty paid by him was $41,764.08. The amount of drawback received by him when he exported the sugar again was $53,967.14, a profit paid from the Treasury of $12,203.06. Every bit of this came out of the consumer, because this was brought in and sent right out, no portion of it being consumed here.

Now, I will take another case in Baltimore, so as to be impartial. I might multiply these cases. "Imported by William H. Perot, from Demerara, ex Bell Hooper, (certificate has been given for exportation of this entire cargo;) 785,573 pounds vacuum-pan sugar." The duty paid was $19,082.74; amount of refund, $21,983.46; excess of refund, $2,900.72.

If the Senate of the United States are willing to continue this kind of importation of sugar, with a view to exportation and the payment of these drawbacks, the records will forever show that I at least have given them particular instances of the effect of the law as it now stands.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to inquire of the former Secretary of the Treasury whether it was not the habit of our Government officials to make particular inquiry into the particular lot of sugar exported, and to trace it or require the exporters to trace it back to their importation, with a view to rebate no more than they actually paid?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is absolutely impracticable. Half a dozen cargoes of sugar might arrive and be dumped at a place, inspected and duty paid, and mixed up. We cannot tell any of these particular sugars. They gave the exact results.

Let me show another thing. I wish to put these figures on record. In 1878 we paid from the Treasury of the United States in the way of drawback on sugars exported $2,330,083; in 1879 we paid from the Treasury as drawback on sugars $3,336,297. In the latter part of June, 1879, the Treasury order took effect which the Supreme Court has set aside. That order was to apply the polariscope test to sugars imported, so as to levy the duty on the saccharine strength. The next year, under the effect of that order, the drawbacks fell off to $913,660, and so the Government saved over $2,000,000, not on articles consumed in this country, but on articles exported, brought in simply for refining and exported, for the drawback only applies to those. Last year, that order being still in force, the amount of drawback was only $758,048, showing that the effect of the order was to save to the Treasury of the United States in drawbacks to refiners over $2,000,000 a year.

It is to correct that little leak from the Treasury that I have endeavored to get the attention of the Senate to the sugar question, and certainly the effect of that order was very beneficial in its operation and I have no doubt interfered very much with this large bounty paid for the exportation of refined sugar.

Mr. FRYE. There is a perfect answer to all that and to these figures, which I will endeavor to bring up from my room and have here to-morrow morning.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, as this bill came from the House of Representatives it was a bill to reduce the internal-revenue taxation of this Government. I am opposed to the whole internal-revenue system as it now exists. I have stated some of the reasons for this opposition on this floor on a former occasion, and may refer to them again. It was adopted as a war measure and properly at that time. The war has terminated and the country has rallied and recuperated from the effects of it to a great extent; and we have reached a period when, in my opinion, that war measure ought to be disposed of, and disposed of forever, for I trust another occasion will never occur for its re-enactment.

I had hoped, therefore, that the tariff would not be introduced as an element in this discussion, but that we should confine ourselves as the other House did in considering this bill, to a reduction of the internal revenue, and I state here that, being opposed to that system, I shall on all occasions where I can properly do so vote for the reduction of the internal revenue; and finally, if an opportunity occurs where such a measure can pass, vote that it be entirely abolished.

I do not think we ought to maintain two armies of collectors. Both political parties prior to the war agreed in the proposition that we were to collect the revenues of this Government by a tariff. We maintain at the custom-house, therefore, one army of collectors. Under the internal-revenue system we maintain an interior army, who are used to great effect in political campaigns.

This army consists of a large number of men who can be increased indefinitely about election times, who are very efficient agents in conducting political campaigns; and no matter which party may be in power, I apprehend that it will be so used as long as the system exists. I think we should abolish it entirely and cut off this army of retainers who do rather the work of political campaigns. For that reason I am disposed to vote for any bill that reduces the internal revenue, looking finally to its utter and final extinction; and while the articles selected in the bill as it came from the House may not be those that I would prefer, still I should vote for that, and I regret to see that the other side of the Chamber in caucus, as we are informed, has determined to introduce certain amendments of the tariff ingrafting them also on this bill.

When those measures are introduced here the result naturally is to open the whole tariff question. If gentlemen on the other side may introduce amendments to the tariff we are expected to do so on this, and it leads to an indefinite number of motions and votes. There is no end to the discussion short of the period when the heat of the weather probably will drive us away from here. I think this is unwise.

While I would vote, as I have stated, for a reduction of the internal revenue, if the bill should be amended in the form proposed by the caucus, then I cannot vote for it, and why? Because in the selection of the articles on which the tariff is to be reduced a very direct, crushing blow is struck at a section of the country which it is my duty in part to represent, including my own State.

You single out the article of sugar, one of the great Southern productions, and you propose to reduce the tariff 25 per cent. upon sugar. I have no doubt when the time comes for a readjustment of the whole tariff system that the sugar duty should be reduced, and I presume I shall vote for its reduction in that connection; but I am unwilling that this Southern production should be singled out and in this manner reduced, while other productions in which other sections of the country are more interested are not reduced.

Contrast, for instance, sugar with woolens where New England factories are interested. I have been looking over a table which was furnished by the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] the other day as to the present tariff on woolens, and I find that on woolen goods the tariff ranges from about 60 to 80 or 90 per cent. higher than on sugar. Why is it when the percentage on sugar is now less than it is on woolens and other manufactured articles of New England and other factories of the country that you propose to strike off 25 per cent. of the tariff upon sugar and not do it upon woolens or other articles of that character? Why select an article that is raised only in the South at which to strike this blow? I cannot sustain that, and if you ingraft it on a bill to reduce the internal revenue, much as I desire to vote to reduce internal revenue, I shall be driven to vote against the bill.

Then, again, take the article of ties for baling cotton. As I understand your amendment, you propose to increase the tariff on them 100 per cent. on what is now paid. This is a bill to reduce the revenue, and yet you single out an article that is used by every Southern planter who makes one bale of cotton, and you increase the tariff 100 per cent. upon that.

I submit, in a sectional point of view, that this is very unfair. I cannot vote for such legislation. When we come to adjust the whole tariff question, let us weigh it as statesmen and do what is right in the premises. If it is necessary to increase the tax on cotton-ties, to make that industry bear its fair share of the public burdens, I may not object; but I do object, and object very seriously, to singling out that particular article used by every Southern planter, and imposing an increased burden of 100 per cent. upon it; I cannot vote for it. I can vote for no bill that has that feature ingrafted upon it, and therefore I shall be compelled to vote against the whole bill if there is such an amendment adopted.

On the other hand I cannot vote for the amendment just offered by my friend the Senator from Tennessee; not that I do not believe in a reduction of the tariff, for I think that is necessary; but it has been admitted by every leading Senator on each side of this Chamber who has spoken on this question that the present tariff is unequal in its provisions, that some articles are now taxed entirely too high and others entirely too low. It was with a view to that fact that we organized the present tariff commission, that they might look into the whole question, readjust it, take off tariff duties where they were now too high, put them on where they were now too low, and put some tariff duties on articles that are not now taxed at all where it is necessary, to raise revenue, and in doing so incidentally to protect home industry, for I believe we should look to both.

I have no doubt there will be a reduction of 10 per cent. or more of taxes; it may be 20 per cent. when the time comes to consider the whole question; but I am unwilling now to say that we will strike off the tariff entirely one year after the 1st day of January next from an article that now carries only 20 per cent., and take only 20 per cent. off Bessemer steel. There is a proposition in this bill, I believe, to reduce Bessemer steel to $20 a ton. Take off 20 per cent. from the present tariff and you will still pay over $20 per ton while some other article that needs protection and has but 20 per cent. on it will be left without any real protection, and you will get no revenue from it. I don't think this is the proper mode of reducing the tariff.

Let us first readjust it; let us do justice between all the interests; let us strike off where it is necessary and add where it is necessary, and when it is properly arranged and properly adjusted upon a fair and proper scale, then it may do at some future time to increase or reduce it by a percentage, but I do not think this is the way to do it now.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Georgia to say a moment since that he could not afford to vote for an amendment that would take off the entire duties on an article that was only taxed 20 per cent.

Mr. BROWN. I only illustrated by saying that there were articles probably taxed only that amount, and as between those articles and Bessemer steel it would be unfair to make such a reduction.

Mr. HARRIS. I perhaps misunderstood the Senator, but I understood him to ask that we should not take off the entire duty on articles which had been taxed only 20 per cent.

Mr. BROWN. I say it would be very unfair as between present articles to run the 20 per cent. through the tariff. There are articles where I presume there ought to be 20 to 30 or probably 40 per cent. taken off. There are other articles where you would have to add to the present tariff if you expected to raise the revenues necessary for the support of the Government. While, therefore, I favor a reasonable and just reduction, and believe it will take place, still I do not favor a reduction in this manner by simply striking off of all articles alike a certain per cent., without regard to the present rate of tariff that is placed on each article. That is my objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

I trust that all the amendments proposed here for the reduction or the increase of tariff-duties will be voted down by the Senate, and let us pass a bill that reduces the internal revenue of the Government down to some reasonable standard. We collect more money at present than we need. We ought to lighten the burdens of the people, and I think it ought to be done by taking off the internal revenue, and as soon as possible get rid of that whole system. That is the better way. The House commenced on that line, and while, as I have said, they may not have been, as I think, judicious in all the selections of articles that they relieve, and had better put some of the reduction on other articles, still, as their bill strikes down the internal revenue, to that extent I stand for it, unless you saddle measures upon it that I cannot vote for, and if so then I must vote against the whole bill.

I believe that we should not at present interfere with the tariff for the reason that we have just appointed a commission, and they have gone diligently to work, as I understand, though there have been some jeers about their having gone to Long Branch. They have gone to a place where they can be comfortable, where they are near the centers of trade, and witnesses can be called before them, and they have gone to work. Let us see their report in December, and if they are entirely through with the investigation then let them report what they have done, and let us see how to adjust the tariff, how to equalize it, before we undertake to reduce it. I am then with gentlemen for a fair reduction which will bring it to the proper revenue standard. I am not for imposing one dollar of tariff for protection beyond the necessities of the Government, but in collecting $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 a year, I am for giving the incidental protection that that collection necessarily makes to our home industries of every character as equally as possible.

There are some of them which are not now protected at all that need some protection. Some are protected too highly where the protection should be to an extent withdrawn. I want for home industry all the incidental protection that naturally flows from raising the amount of revenue that is necessary to support the Government. If I had my way about it I would raise every dollar of it by tariff and not one dollar of it by internal-revenue, and in doing that I have no doubt we should lower the tariff in many instances and get a larger revenue than we now get from the present high tariff.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not think that any committee was ever treated precisely as the Committee on Finance have been treated in relation to this bill. Whether in obedience to a caucus or not I do not know, but as I understood when the sugar provision was before the Finance Committee it was approved of by every member of the committee; that is to say, all were in favor of the reduction; and yet when I come into the Senate I find the Committee on Finance deserted by every member upon the other side of the Chamber, so far as I can ascertain.

The proposition before us is to reduce the duties on the whole line of the tariff 10 per cent. on the 1st of January and 10 per cent. more on the 1st of July next. In other words, it is to completely paralyze the industries of this country. No manufacturer can hope for any prosperity with such a proposition as that staring him in the face, with a reduction coming on the 1st of January of 10 per cent. and of 10 per cent. more on the 1st of July.

It is obvious that even the agitation of the reduction of the internal tax upon whisky has been disastrous to that interest. This would be, as I have already stated, striking down at one blow the entire industries of the country. Then with what sense, may I ask, has the Senator from Tennessee adopted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, for I find it is identically the same amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky July 8.

Mr. HARRIS. Somewhat modified, but substantially the same. It is modified as to the time and as to some of its phraseology.

Mr. MORRILL. As the Senator from Georgia has well stated, there are many articles in the tariff that may be safely reduced; there are others that cannot be. There are some, I think, that the Senator from Tennessee would be unwilling to reduce. For instance, let me point out to him hemp, the duty on which is now 30 per cent. Does anybody in Tennessee or Kentucky desire to have that reduced? Then I may refer to the duty on horses, and a large number of horses are annually imported from Canada. The duty is only 20 per cent. Does anybody propose to reduce the duty upon horses? Then we have barley, oats, wheat, potatoes, and corn imported in large amounts, especially barley, oats, and potatoes, from the Dominion of Canada. The duties upon those were placed at a moderate and a specific rate. Does anybody propose to reduce the duty upon barley, which now is 15 cents a bushel; upon oats, which is 10 cents; upon wheat, which is 20 cents; upon potatoes, which is 15 cents, and upon corn, which is 10 cents? Can it be possible that anybody is in favor of such a sweeping reduction as is proposed by the Senator from Tennessee?

Then again there are other articles, articles in the nature of luxuries. Take the duty upon liquors, upon brandy, upon the higher grades of wines, champagne and the like, and laces, diamonds, and silver-plated ware. Is there anybody in favor of a reduction of the duties upon these articles? I think that the absurdity of the proposition is apparent, and let me assure my friend from Tennessee the disastrous effects would be apparent before six months should have elapsed if this sweeping kind of amendment is adopted here by the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say one single word more in relation to the remark of the Senator from Georgia about the present duty upon woolens, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Georgia will examine he will find that there is generally only 35 per cent. duties upon woolens, besides the actual equivalent that is given for the duty on wool.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Vermont before he takes his seat what is his opinion as to the effect of the reduction of 25 per cent. upon sugar? I understood the Senator to say that if a reduction of 10 per cent. should be adopted by the Senate the entire industries of this country would be paralyzed. If that be true as to a reduction of 10 per cent. upon the entire industries, what would be the effect upon the sugar interest of a reduction of 25 per cent. ad valorem?

Mr. MORRILL. The 25 per cent. upon sugar was a temporary affair, levied in 1875. Let me say to the Senator from South Carolina that my own State produces more sugar than any other State save Louisiana according to its numbers, and we shall be perfectly content with the duty on sugar after this 25 per cent. is off. When I was in the House dealing upon this question we had no Representative from Louisiana who was not perfectly contented with 1 cent per pound as a protection upon the Louisiana sugar. If this 25 per cent. be taken off there will still remain 1¼ cents a pound upon the very lowest grades, and upon the grades which are ordinarily consumed from 2½ to 3 cents a pound.

Mr. BUTLER. That may all be, but I understand the entire tariff system of this country is a temporary system, and that there was an increase of the tariff on very many other articles temporarily. If the tariff commission is to consider the whole tariff question, I cannot see why this single industry should be selected at this particular juncture for a reduction of taxation.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is the pertinent question.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the mysterious part to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can answer that.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to hear it answered.

Mr. VANCE. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I was not aware of the fact that he had the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from South Carolina asked a question, and I wanted to answer it. I think I can settle that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the condition of things in the Senate with this latter-day bill for the relief of the people of the American States from taxation is certainly a mystery. It is admitted on all sides that there is too much taxation, internal and external. It is admitted on all sides that a great deal of taxation upon the statute-books arose from a state of war; and as we have been at peace for pretty well on to twenty years, it would seem that that taxation which had its origin in a state of war should be repealed.

I do not suppose any people in this world are taxed as searchingly as are the people of the United States now. The first thing that greets a foreigner when he comes within sight of the shores of this land of liberty, freedom, and equality is a custom-house officer, and if he should happen to have a bandana pocket handkerchief and a jackknife for sale, two to one he has to turn back with them, the duties being so high as to prevent his landing and selling them; while the internal-revenue officers, the only representatives of that extinct species of industrious gentlemen called land pirates we have left among us, roam the country from one end of it to the other, with the power to invade homes, the right to carry arms and to insult peaceable citizens, and with not only the power but the privilege and the pleasing duty of electioneering for the party in whose behalf they collect taxes.

This calls for relief; there is no mistake in that. No man who hears the growls of the American people in regard to these taxes and to the manner in which that taxation is collected can be disobedient unto the heavenly vision, that is to say, vox populi being vox Dei.

Aware of this and unable any longer to resist it, the party which has charge of the Government of the United States at this time put in what I have heard wittily described as an "affidavit for a continuance," in the shape of a tariff-commission bill. After that was passed even then the growl did not cease, but the people of the United States who were suffering from taxation appreciated it at its true value and demanded something more. Three days after the House of Representatives had sent to us a resolution to adjourn they also sent us a bill of relief, and that bill of relief has been graciously added unto by the committee of this body.

When you look at that bill of relief and consider the causes of complaint that the people of the United States have against the excessive taxation which produces $150,000,000 surplus revenue, I am sure that you would be reminded, if you had ever heard the story, of a kind old man who lives in North Carolina on the top of a high hill. A wagoner came by one day whose team stalled at the foot of the hill and refused to pull. He came up to the old man's house and asked him to lend him a pair of mules and a fifth-chain to pull him up the hill. Said he, "My friend, I have not got a pair of mules or a fifth-chain to save your life, but I am always anxious to help a man in distress; I can lend you the best fiddle you ever drew a bow across." That was his proposition to relieve his neighbor in distress; and when you look at this bill of relief given in reference to the demands of the American people I am sure that you will arrive at the conclusion that it is like the old fellow who kindly and out of the goodness of his heart voluntarily offered to lend his fiddle; only this little amusement which it is proposed to give to the poor taxed people comes perforce, and there is not much of voluntary contribution about it.

What is it that it is proposed to relieve? It is said the people are suffering from an enormous tax of nearly 100 per cent. on woolen goods. The Republican party of this Chamber say, "Well, that is very bad indeed, but I will tell you what we will do. We cannot relieve the tax on woolen goods, but we will take it off the banks! We will take it off bank capital; we will take it off bank deposits. Yes, we will go farther; we will take it off everybody's money lying in bank and we will relieve them from their taxes." That is great relief, is it not?

There is an effort always to fasten upon this side of the Chamber the imputation that we are enemies of the banks. Whenever any man says anything about the banks, especially my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] they say he is an enemy of the banks. We might as well say when you refuse to relieve the farmers of the duty on trace-chains or on his agricultural implements that you are the enemies of the farmer. There is just as much propriety in it, there is more propriety in it, because more truth.

But they do not stop with proposing to relieve the tax on banks and bank capital and bank deposits and bank checks. They come next to that class of people who prey upon the ignorance or the necessities of their fellow-creatures, the men who manufacture what are called patent medicines; as I might term them the anti-Malthusians, men intended by Providence to keep down the surplus population of an overcrowded world and to insure its capacity to furnish food sufficient for the human race. They say we cannot relieve you from the tax. We cannot lend you a pair of mules and a fifth-chain, but we will take the tax off these domestic poisons and will smooth your road down to the tomb as much as we possibly can!

Then what do they do as a further measure of relief? They propose to take the tax off perfumes, cologne, Lubin's Extract, the Balm of a Thousand Flowers, cinnamon drops, and a hundred things used by people for the purpose of perfumery. It is proposed to take the tax from off them in order to afford relief to the people of this country.

I submit to every candid man if it is not a caricature upon just and wise legislation, not only to take the tax off those things but to single them out as the objective points around which are clustered the most human suffering and agony, and in regard to which the heaviest, most oppressive and intolerable taxation is imposed. Those are selected as samples.

You come down through the list afforded by this bill to playing-cards, cigars and cigarettes, friction matches, and everything of that kind, the tax on not one of which has ever been complained of so far as I have been able to tell by Times or Chronicle or otherwise among the American people. That is the relief they propose to give. No, they propose to give a little more. They propose to take off the tax of $8 a ton on steel rails—for the benefit of whom? Not for the benefit of the farmer; not for the benefit of the great mass of the consumers in this country who use steel, but they take it off solely for the benefit of the great corporations of this country.

Lastly, they propose to take off the tax on sugar. The only reasons I could conceive for that in the world are in the first place that sugar is an article which yields almost pure revenue and protects very few. About nine-tenths of the sugar consumed by the American people is brought in from abroad, and the tax is therefore pure revenue and does not go into anybody's pocket. The second reason that I could give is that it is a Southern product, and as it is not produced in the North, waiving the immense amount of maple sugar produced in Vermont, therefore it is a tax the reduction of which would only strike at a few planters in the swamps of Louisiana while the whole country would be benefited.

That is the whole system of relief which is proposed at this late hour in the session of Congress, when everybody is desirous of shaking off the dust of this city from his feet and going to his home if he has one.

But the relief is twofold. It not only is relief from taxation to take off the duty and the tax levied on banks, friction matches, playing-cards, cosmetics, perfumery, patent medicines, &c., but it is also a great relief for the farmers of the South from oppressive taxation to double it on cotton-ties, as this bill does. To double it! It almost trebles it. It increases the tax on cotton-ties as at present existing of 35 per cent. ad valorem to about 95 per cent. ad valorem, which is almost three times higher than the tax as it now stands. Who will that relieve? It will relieve the manufacturers of hoop-iron and of cotton-ties; there is no doubt about that; but it will not relieve from taxation the people who have to use these cotton-ties. In the South where cotton is manufactured alone it will increase the tax to the farmer who puts up his bales of cotton to the extent of $600,000. How much will it increase the taxation in the other portions of the country where hoop-iron is used I have not been able nor have I had any means to ascertain. That is the bill that is given to us.

Mr. President, there can be no mistaking the issues which are submitted to the country by this course of legislation. I have prepared them as they present themselves to me in the shape of a docket, issues which in this high court of tax reform are to be tried. The first case that stands on the docket, No. 1, would be read as follows:

Bank Capital and Deposits vs. Farming Capital and Implements.

No. 2. Bank Checks vs. Trace Chains.

No. 3. Rat Exterminator, Bug Powders & Co. vs. Camphor, Opium, and Chloroform.

No. 4. Lubin's Extract, Cinnamon Drops & Co. vs. Salt.

I would respectfully ask the court to have my name marked for the defendant in that case.

No. 5. Buchu, Rosadalis, and Cundurango vs. Cotton and Woolen Machinery.

No. 6. Playing Cards vs. Horseshoes, Nails, and Stoves.

No. 7. Steel Rails for Railroads vs. Hoes, Axes, Planes, and Saws for Workingmen.

No. 8. Cigars and Cigarettes vs. Cotton Ties and Cotton Bagging.

I do not attempt to go through the list, but that is about the order in which the cases will be called before the public. I desire to announce that I appear for the defendant in all those cases, and I should like to see who will mark his name for the plaintiff. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has given us an intimation that he appears for the plaintiff in the case of playing-cards; the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] I believe appears for Rat Exterminator, Cundurango & Co.; and so on as the course of debate has developed the individual preferences and idiosyncrasies in the legislative sense of the word of the various Senators in this body. If they are willing to go to the people upon such a record as that I am sure I am.

But let me say to gentlemen in all seriousness that it is time they were taking warning. The people of this country are not to be deceived in this matter. There is a real and genuine demand for tariff reform, and they will not be put off by any chips and whetstones in this kind of way. Let gentlemen here remember the flood of the Mississippi which so lately desolated and poured over the vast region of country which borders that great river.

Let gentlemen recollect the tornado in the West which swept the forest before its breath and overturned cities and towns. Let them remember that, and let them beware. There is a day of reckoning coming so sure as we all shall live to see it. There will be tariff reform. You cannot always fool people by saying that the high tariff is kept up in the interest of American labor. That is the invariable excuse; we want the tariff kept on because we want to protect the American labor against foreign labor. A man certainly is a laborer although he does not stand inside of a factory. There are seven laborers in the fields and in the forests, upon the highways and streets of your town to where there is one who sits inside of a factory.

If I were going forth on a political mission as the apostle of free trade, do you know where I would begin? I would not go to the fields and among the agriculturists; I would go to the factories of New England and to the iron-forges of Pennsylvania, and I would talk to the men there. I would show them that while all this vast protection, all this enormous oppressive tax is laid upon the consumers in this country in their name they are not getting the benefit of it. I would show them that the protection to American workingmen was the same thing precisely as protection to the pocket of the capitalist who employed them.

I heard of an old darkey minister in the South who got in trouble with his congregation because he had made away with some money, and he could not exactly render an account at the proper time. When drawn up before the session of the church he could not show up; he could neither have "a fair ballot" nor "a free count." All that he could say was, "Oh, brethren, I tell you that money has been spent, every dollar of it, for the glory of the Lord." A pious old darkey in the corner jumped up and said, "Dar, now, I done learned something; I learn now that glory of the Lord is the same as Uncle Peter's left-hand breeches-pocket; that is what I have learned."

American labor means simply the pocket of the capitalist. Already the laborers are beginning to open their eyes on this subject. Let me have read an extract from the proclamation of these strikers up in Pennsylvania, which I find quoted in the Farmers' Review, published in Chicago. The Chief Clerk will oblige me by reading the portion marked, in order to show that the eyes of the workingmen of this country par excellence, that is to say, the workingmen who are protected in factories, are being opened to the true state of affairs.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

After a while, when asked by their tariff-favoring employers to take part in a tariff demonstration, or to carry a tariff motto, we will ask back what benefit to us is a tariff on coal and iron while our labor is unprotected; to be attacked and pauperized by cheap labor enticed here from Europe and Asia.

The Iron-Workers' Association, the Glass-Workers' Union, and the Coal-Miners' Association are entitled to as much protection from the Government as the iron, glass, and the coal exchanges. More they do not ask, but as much they will soon insist upon, if men fresh from the old countries are to be misled here to be used to cripple or to ruin our trades unions.

Every time the coke employés have attempted to lift themselves from squalor, dependence, and destitution by asking a slight increase in wages, car-loads of emigrants, direct from Castle Garden, promptly arrive to break down whatever little of organization or spirit that appears among the men. Twice has the same plan broken down the organization of the Montour mines, and in order to deprive them and us of the universal right of conversation, they must pen them in their own fields and refuse to allow any one to speak to them. If we step on their property we are arrested for trespass or conspiracy. If the suffrage of the workingmen is to continue to be the bulwark of protection to home industries this war on organization must be stopped.

If this tactic is continued workingmen will either obtain such laws as will protect alike the trades associations of both labor and capital, or refuse to support a tariff which prevents competition in foreign products for the benefit of the employed, and which at the same time not only leaves wide open but also encourages the competition of foreign labor to the detriment of the American employé.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the honorable Senator from North Carolina if he approves the doctrines of the extract which he has just had read?

Mr. VANCE. I am not called upon to approve it, but I approve the spirit which is teaching men to see that they are not fairly dealt with.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand the paper which has been read it contains a threat that the laborers whose proclamation the Senator had read to the Senate will refuse further to support protection for American labor unless foreigners are hereafter excluded from coming to this country, and that is the spirit which the honorable Senator says he approves.

Mr. VANCE. I did not say that I approved it; but I say it is the state of feeling that the course pursued by your tariff is exciting in this country, and that you will not be much longer able to deceive factory operatives.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for calling to his attention the fact that the extract which he has read contains no expression of condemnation or disapprobation of the protective tariff? On the contrary, it implies that the persons whose proclamation is there given are in favor of it. But it does say that it is their demand that no foreign laborer shall come over here in future to share with them the benefits which this policy confers. That is all there is in it.

Mr. VANCE. The article speaks for itself.

Mr. HOAR. I think it does.

Mr. VANCE. I have distinctly told the Senator that I was not called upon to approve the writing, but I am glad to see that the doctrine which the Senator and his associates hold is bringing about this feeling, that it is opening men's eyes to the enormity of this thing and showing the hollowness and hypocrisy of the cry they have been making in the name of the American laborer, when the Senator's own constituents and the people whose interests he represents go into the free markets of the world and hire these very pauper laborers over the heads of native American laborers because they can get them cheaper. That is what I mean. While I am at it let us have a little more. I ask the Chief Clerk to read another extract taken from a forthcoming volume of the census in relation to this matter.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAGES IN MANUFACTURING.

There were in 1880, according to the Federal census report, in round numbers, 950,000 persons employed in manufacturing in the twenty principal cities of the United States. There was paid to them $375,000,000 in wages, or $395 each per annum. The material they used was valued at $1,345,000,000. The value of the product was $2,120,000,000. The net fruits of their labor, therefore, was $775,000,000. The amount of capital invested was $862,000,000. The net profit appears to have been nearly 90 per cent. This is a remarkable showing of profit. The average wages were less than $7.60 per week for operatives, while the apparent profits were thus large.

About one-fourth of these laborers were blacksmiths, shoemakers, carpenters, and bakers. These are supposed to get wages something like double the average here given, which would diminish the weekly wages of the other three-fourths to only about $5 per week. These seem to be incredibly low figures and do not justify the continual plea of the protectionists that the enormous tariff put upon all goods is necessary to keep up the wages of laborers. There does not appear to be any light in which this manufacturing subject can be viewed that will make the position of the protectionists appear tenable.

Mr. HOAR. In what volume of the census is that found?

Mr. VANCE. It is compiled from the census.

Mr. HOAR. From what volume or from what author?

Mr. VANCE. The volume is not out yet, as I understand. It is compiled from the forthcoming census.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state who is the authority? I understand him to state that it was an extract from a forthcoming volume of the census.

Mr. VANCE. I was mistaken if I said so, or the Senator was mistaken if he understood me to say so.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say so, and so did others around me.

Mr. VANCE. I say it was compiled from figures furnished by the forthcoming census.

I want to say further, that the idea that the American workingmen or laborers are to be paid by the public instead of their employers partakes of the character which this whole protective system has had impressed upon it by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

As long as the Senator from Massachusetts has undertaken to interrupt me twice I should like to call his attention to a question which I will now ask him. Can I obtain the Senator's attention? I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is necessary that an act of Congress should be passed to permit the employers or capitalists of New England to pay their workmen higher wages than they get? I pause for a reply and I get none. Therefore I am free to presume that they could pay their employés higher wages if they wanted to do so without an enabling act of Congress. Was ever such a proposition heard? Was ever such a proposition made among civilized people as that a whole party should pledge itself to procuring, and that thousands and hundreds of thousands of documents should be published in the newspapers and lobbyists should swarm around this Capitol begging the members of Congress to pass a law, in the name of Heaven pass a law, by which we will be able to pay our workingmen higher wages than we give them?

The simple meaning of the whole of it is that they want a law passed, of course not to enable them to pay higher wages, but to compel you and me to pay their wages. When you put the question as I have to them, "Why do you not pay them higher wages; let us know?" the answer is, "We cannot afford it." Can we afford it? If you cannot, how can I? If I cannot, and you cannot, how can the women and children and the hirelings, the day-laborers and the consumers over the whole of this broad land afford to pay your workingmen higher wages? You are getting all the profits.

There is still another thing that I do not understand. I cannot possibly understand how a party composed, as the Republican party of the United States and as the protectionist portion of it is, of gentlemen of education and of means and of a high state of civilization—cultivation you might call it, cultivated almost to death—should absolutely advocate a tariff which in express terms, not in its spirit only, but absolutely and in express terms, discriminates against the poor in favor of the rich. Is that too strong a charge to make? Look at the report. I am able to give the Senator from Massachusetts now a definite description of the title of the book from which I read. It is "Home Consumption and Imposts. Imported merchandise entered for consumption in the United States, with rates of duty and amount of duties collected, comprising Statements No. 26 to 34, inclusive, of the annual report of commerce and navigation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1881," furnished by the Treasury Department.

To begin with, I find the amount of hats imported into this country valued at above 40 cents and not exceeding 60 cents per pound to be 93.90 per cent. ad valorem duty; hats valued at above 80 cents per pound, 58.22 per cent. ad valorem. So that the poor man's wool hat or his Sunday-go-to-meeting hat, costing less than 40 cents per pound, pays almost 94 per cent., and the gentleman's silk hat, covered all over with the perfumery with which he decorates himself and scents himself when he sets out on his career of conquest among the tender sex, only pays 58.22 per cent. That is not all.

Let us see a little more. On dress goods, women's and children's, and real or imitation Italian cloths, valued at not exceeding 20 cents per square yard, the duty is 69.74 per cent. ad valorem. On dress goods of the same character valued at above 20 cents per square yard, 8 cents per square yard, and 40 per cent. ad valorem, running at 66.86 per cent. ad valorem. Sixty-nine and seventy-four hundredths per cent. ad valorem is the tariff on the dress goods of the cheaper cloth worn by the poor, and 66.86 per cent. ad valorem on the goods of the higher quality worn by those in better circumstances.

On blankets valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound the duty is 72.63 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 80 cents per pound the duty is 71.50 per cent. ad valorem. So that the poor man's blanket absolutely costs him, in proportion to quality, more than is charged for the rich man's blankets of finer quality. On flannels valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 95 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 80 cents per pound 65.45 per cent. ad valorem. There is fully one-third more on the flannels used by the poor people than on the finer quality used by the rich.

Hosiery. We have heard a good deal here about the suffering interests in the hosiery line in some parts of the United States, arising from a mistake in the tariff, as is said, in compiling the statutes. Of course it is said that the law-makers did not intend to put a tariff of only 35 per cent. upon foreign hosiery, and therefore it is a mistake, and we hear a great deal about the suffering interests in that respect. Let us see how it is. Hosiery valued at above 40 cents and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 89.44 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 80 cents per pound, 55.78 per cent. ad valorem.

So you see it runs all the way through. The tariff is so arranged that in the case of the men who use the finest quality of goods, whose complaints could be heard, whose money could be injected in a canvass, their tariff duties are reduced, while the duties of the poor who have to use the coarser cloths, and blankets, and hosiery, and hats, &c., is put at a price that is absolutely prohibitory or almost prohibitory, and they have to bear it without complaint.

According to the same authority from which I have read, the total amount of taxes by the tariff per capita in the United States for the last year was a fraction less than $4, being $3.761. In round numbers we would say $4 for the whole United States. Taking it for granted, which I believe is the general estimate, that one-fifth only of the articles consumed in the United States comes from abroad and that the remaining four-fifths is supplied by domestic manufacture, and that the same amount or near it of taxation is imposed by the domestic manufacture that is imposed upon imported goods, we would have $20 per head, of which $16 is paid for protection. Every man, woman, and child in the United States is taxed either for the benefit of the Treasury or for the benefit of the manufacturer $20, a sum, I will venture to say, which is not equaled by the taxation imposed upon any other people in the known civilized world. Let this be learned by the people: that they are taxed $20 per head for every soul in the land, and of this sum the Government gets $4 and the manufacturer pockets $16.

On many of the articles embraced in this bill I am willing to see the tax reduced, but because I decline to vote to reduce it in this exceptional manner I do not hold that I am committed to any kind of enmity to a reduction of the tax. I want the tax upon all to go down together; I want all the interests to be relieved together. I want the banks to wait until the farmers are relieved. I want the farmers to wait until the consumers at large are relieved. I want the American workingmen, as they are called, in factories to wait for relief until their brethren who are not working in factories are relieved. I want them all to go together, banks and everybody. I do not propose to be made the instrument of selecting the banks as special objects of mercy on the part of the Government, leaving others to take their chances.

Why is this measure brought in here? Why could we not wait for the tariff commission? It was said that we were not capable of framing a tariff. It was acknowledged by some Senators, I believe, that they were not capable of making a tariff, and this commission was sought as a means of furnishing the desired article in the shape of tariff reform, and a general scheme of tariff taxation. Why not wait until it develops itself? Why precipitate this discussion here at this late hour? It is, as a matter of course, for the purpose of securing themselves against the cry which comes up from the people of the United States for relief from taxation. It will not answer. It will not deceive the people of this country any longer.

I would object to singling out any one class of people in this country for relief from general taxation unless it was shown that that was a peculiar class, suffering peculiar hardships. They are very ready to bring forward any relief for a particular or peculiar class of people in the manufacturing interests who are suffering for more taxation, but for people who are in any other class of society who are suffering from overtaxation they have no such consideration.

I was furnished the other day with a copy of a speech made by Hon. OSSIAN RAY, of New Hampshire, in the House in relation to the knit-goods question. In the table which he furnished, which I suppose is correct, I find the capital invested in the State of New Hampshire in the manufacture of knit goods was $1,224,000; the wages expended, $536,117; the material, $1,249,600; the profit, $577,062, almost 50 per cent. Yet that class of industry is supposed to be suffering from a mistake of the law-givers, and is urgently demanding relief, and relief of an exceptional nature, not waiting for the tariff commission. That very interest, according to the showing of its advocates in Congress, is making about 48 per cent. upon the capital employed in the manufacture that it carries on. That is the character of the relief which is sought, and which instantly demands the earnest sympathy of the Republican party.

If they were only so ready to come forward to grant relief to any particular interest of anybody outside of manufacturers there would be some excuse in asking this side of the Chamber to aid them in correcting what they allege to be a mistake, by which one of their interests is suffering; but that interest is not suffering, and in my opinion it was not any mistake.

Unless the bill can be so amended as to afford some relief to the people whom I represent and to the class of which my people are a portion, I expect to vote against every single one of those provisions. I am not even willing to vote for the reduction of the tax on sugar, a reduction which is desired in my country, unless other interests that are now taxed too high shall come down in the same proportion that it is proposed to bring down the rate on sugar. That I see it is impossible to obtain.

The fiat has gone forth. This little bit of a niggardly, parsimonious bill of relief is brought in, and we are all at once given to understand that that is all that shall be proposed, so that we shall have to take that or take nothing. I can very clearly see from the course of the debate heretofore upon the various amendments that that is about all that will be given, and unless some more relief is given than is proposed by the bill in its present shape, I shall vote against it, and shall hope to see it voted down.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it would be abusing the patience of the Senate to undertake an elaborate reply to the extraordinary speech of the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] at this time in this sultry afternoon.

The Senator repeated, with a few additional statistics and a few extracts from the comic almanac, a speech that he made in the early part of the session, in which I believe with great felicity he compared the section of country which he represents to Egypt with its fertile soil and its fertilizing stream. He might have gone on with his comparison. It has been an Egypt also in the Democratic policy by which it has been cursed, in its incapacity to learn anything from the spirit of the age, in its inability to recognize either the capacities of its manhood or the resources with which God has blessed it.

He is not contented, however, with retaining the State which he represents here in the condition of Egypt, to which he likened it the other day. He now threatens it with an additional Democratic benefit in the shape of the tornado and the flood, which he says are to sweep over the country in punishment of the Republican policies. I think the policy which the Senator advocates will be found more destructive in its effects on the unhappy citizens of that region than the tornado or the flood which he invokes.

I rose, however, simply to call the attention of the Senate and the Senator to the fallacy which lies at the bottom of the argument he has been stating for the last hour or two in every variety of statement in which he has clothed it. He read what he says is taken from the last census, an estimate of the number of persons engaged in manufactures in the twenty principal manufacturing cities of the country, a statement of the cost of the material employed in their manufacture, and the amount of the wages paid to the workmen, and from that he inferred that the difference between the cost of the material and the wages on the one side and the value of the products on the other represents the profit of the employer, and he invokes public attention to the small comparative pittance which is received by the laborer.

Does not the Senator know—and I would not think it worth while even to put the question if this argument was not repeated so often by Democratic authority—does not the Senator know that he left out in the calculation, as he did in the one with which he closed his speech, a very large portion of the elements which were necessary to make it correct? He left out entirely the original cost of the establishment, the cost of machinery, the value of the real estate employed, the cost of the water-power, or the steam-power, the cost of lighting, of warming, of insurance, of transportation, the taxes, and undertakes simply to point out the difference between the raw material plus the wages on the one hand, and the profit upon the other.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. HOAR. When I have got through the statement I should be very happy to hear the answer. Every one of these items, when analyzed and reduced to its lowest term, is largely, almost principally, the product of labor. The most splendid and perfect factory on earth of brick or stone, excepting the value of the clay in the soil, the iron in the mine, the wood in the forest, represents a wage which has been paid to human labor and to human skill. Behind the factory, behind the capital, behind the raw material, lies, in every step from the time when these materials are first taken out unchanged from the place where they have been deposited by nature, the constant employment and the perpetual wage paid to American labor.

In every manufacturing product the principal products of this country from 90 to 95 per cent. represents what has been paid at one time or at one step in the process to the laborer, and 5 or 10 per cent. what has been paid for those products of the earth which are capable of ownership and which are all that capital in its last resort and analysis can claim for its share. How idle to base an argument against the protective policy of this country upon statistics which leave out of view these considerations.

In another thing the argument was not perhaps surprising. The Senator has not forgotten the days when before the war he was a representative of the great Know-Nothing party of the South in its attack upon the foreigner and the immigrant. He cites with what I could scarcely misunderstand, as it seemed to me, his approbation and commendation, the proclamation or resolves of a party or company of well-fed, well-clad, well-paid American workingmen, who demand that the blessings which they share and which are theirs shall not be extended in the future to those persons born in other lands.

There is not a word in the extract which the Senator has read of condemnation of the protective policy. There is not even a claim that under it those laboring-men have not received their full and fair share of the result of the union of labor and capital. There is not a claim of those men in regard to the matter of wages, but the demand is this: "Your tariff policy, of which we have received the benefit and which has covered this land with factories, with railroads, and with workshops, with the homes of well-paid labor and of American citizenship, we will strike down unless you refuse to admit hereafter to these advantages the citizens and natives of other lands." That is the principle which the honorable Senator has dignified with his indorsement.

Mr. President, it is idle for the honorable Senator to claim that the workingmen, although undoubtedly their share of the joint product ought to be and will be considerably increased, do not prosper and profit by the result of this protective policy. What brought over the 750,000 immigrants who landed in the last twelve months at Castle Garden? Are not the instincts of men at least as sure as those of birds? What occasions them to leave free-trade England and oppressed Ireland to come to this country where, as the Senator would have it, the workingman is so oppressed by the capitalist? Where did they go? Did they go to North Carolina or Kentucky? Did they go to Virginia until my honored friend on my right [Mr. MAHONE] opened that noble State to its new career of prosperity? When they go to Virginia they will take very little interest in the resolutions of '98.

Mr. BECK. No, they go to the free lands of the Northwest.

Mr. HOAR. Do they go to North Carolina? They stop in New York, now the principal manufacturing city of the country. They go to Philadelphia; they stop in the twenty fair cities and the hundred fair manufacturing villages of Massachusetts, and they will laugh to scorn the utterances of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I was simply going to ask the Senator before he took his seat if the laborers of whom he speaks are so well paid and taken care of and so well fed, why do they strike?

Mr. HOAR. They strike because they choose to exercise the right of freemen. Was there ever a Yankee getting two dollars who did not want three?

Mr. VANCE. We will agree with you on that proposition

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Massachusetts can answer that better than I can.

Mr. HOAR. They strike because they wish to guard jealously their right to a fair, just, and equitable share of the joint product of their labor, and they have very largely my sympathy, and the sympathy of my associates. They strike in the free-trade countries too.

Mr. BUTLER. I merely wanted the Senator to give me the information.

Mr. HOAR. In the contests between labor and capital which have arisen in the past in the free-trade Democratic communities represented by those two Senators, the strikes, I am very sorry to say, have been very different, and of a very much less satisfactory kind.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me say to the Senator that in the community where the Senator lives there is about to be an end to that oppressive system and habit which has prevailed there. He will find that the same class of people at the North will not submit to this oppression the Senator now complains of.

Mr. HOAR. This striking for higher wage under the Republican policies is a little better kind of striking, in my judgment, than the whipping of women or of children or of grown men under the lash of an owner. The policy in which the capitalist owns the laborer whom he employs may possibly have educated some Senators to look with very holy horror upon this process by which the free laboring-man asserts his claim to his share of the wages.

I desire to send to the Clerk's desk to be read a statement which will show that these strikes are not confined to countries where the tariff policy prevails; they have been much more extended, much more criminal, much more disastrous under the free-trade policy of Great Britain.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Some of our free-trade contemporaries are foolishly attempting to attribute the Lawrence strike in particular and strikes in general to the tariff. If they occur where there is a tariff, imagine what would happen without the tariff. Looking to that elysium of free trade, England, we find that there almost three thousand strikes have taken place since 1870, an average of about two hundred and thirty per year; that of this number one hundred and fourteen of the largest ones caused a loss of wages of $25,000,000 nearly half of which was lost to cotton hands of Lancaster in 1878, when 300,000 people were out of employment for nine weeks. Thus in a free-trade country in twelve years three thousand strikes occur; in a country protected by a tariff only about three hundred in the same period. So far, then, as protection affects the question at all, the verdict is decidedly in favor of the tariff country.

Mr. HOAR. I have here the rate of agricultural wages in the several States. I will observe before I proceed to read that I am informed one of the recent strikes to which the Senator alludes, the strikes in the coal regions of Maryland, the laborers are receiving $3 a day. Here are the monthly wages. This is the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1879, giving the average by the year, the monthly wage for the twelve months through of farm laborers, without board: Maine, $21; Massachusetts, $28.60; North Carolina, $11.92; South Carolina, $10.38.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that without board?

Mr. HOAR. That is without board.

Mr. BUTLER. In Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly. I will read it again.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very interesting. I should like to hear it again.

Mr. HOAR. That is the difference between the North and the Egypt which the honorable Senator pictured as his ideal of a free Commonwealth. In Maine, without board, by the year, $21, with board $12.78 per month; in New Hampshire $21.45 without board, with board $13.31; in Massachusetts $28.60 without board, $15.40 with board; in North Carolina $11.92 without board, which is considerably less than half that in Massachusetts, about 30 per cent., and with board $8.10; in South Carolina $10.38 without board, and with board $7.32.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator if those wages are for the year round?

Mr. HOAR. These wages are for the year round. Here are the transient wages, which I will read.

Mr. BUTLER. Twenty-eight dollars in Massachusetts for the year round?

Mr. HOAR. Twenty-eight dollars and sixty cents. I myself pay $40 a month, which is a good deal more. You cannot get labor for this now. Wages have risen since this table was prepared; they are much higher now. Take the transient wages in harvest in Maine—this is per day of course; without board it is $1.50, with board $1.12. In North Carolina $1.09 without board, 84 cents with board; in South Carolina $1.14 without board, 88 cents with board; in Florida 98 cents without board, 73 cents with board.

Mr. BUTLER. There is not much difference.

Mr. VANCE. What is the Senator reading from, if I may be permitted to ask?

Mr. HOAR. I am reading from the Department of Agriculture Report for the year 1879, the report of the statistician; and I will annex the entire table:

Average wages for 1880.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Do I understand the Senator to be reading the different rates of wages for the States he has designated as an indication that the high-tariff States pay higher wages than those which are not benefited by it? Is that the purpose of the Senator in the reading?

Mr. HOAR. I give it as an indication that the entire effect of the policy which has prevailed in those States of which protection is a part is to make this difference in the condition of the laborer as compared with other policies.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator extend his comparison to the protected States of the East and the agricultural States of the West which are not benefited?

Mr. HOAR. The agricultural States of the West have derived from the Republican policies which the Senator and I have advocated, the tariff being very largely——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg to differ from my friend on that too. I want him to run the parallel between the protected States of the East and the agricultural States of the West.

Mr. HOAR. The whole table will be printed.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Nebraska forgets that the tariff is a local question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I referred the Senator to other States on account of the locality of the question.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly in a new State where the roads are not broken, where the natural forces have not been subdued and brought into the service of man, on the frontier, all classes of labor, like all other things, are higher. Of course such a comparison as that has nothing to do with the question of the tariff.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That suggestion will not apply to States like Iowa, nor even to Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. I am not making the statement in regard to Nebraska. I am taking the statement from North Carolina and South Carolina, and they were settled substantially contemporaneously withthe old States of the East.

Mr. BUTLER. They were settled by the slaves sent down from Massachusetts and sold to us. I admit that.

Mr. HOAR. Those States were settled contemporaneously. They had much larger natural advantages than the bleak New England States of Maine and New Hampshire and Massachusetts, concerning which I have compared the statistics. They had fertile fields, rich mines, abundant water-power, and they establish the policies to the remains of which the Senator from North Carolina clings, while his wiser and more progressive associates on that side of the Chamber who sit about him are beginning to throw off the shackles. I am comparing those States with the result of his policy as to labor, a comparison which he invoked and invited, with the similar condition of the persons who come from abroad and take up their abode in the manufacturing communities of the East. Undoubtedly the Senator from Nebraska is right that in the new agricultural States of the Northwest labor is higher, and if I chose I could make the point still more emphatic by taking the rates of wages in those States and comparing them with the wages in North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, one reason why labor is higher in Massachusetts than it is in North Carolina is that in North Carolina we have to pay for our own labor and Massachusetts labor too. When the Senator comes to count up the patent churns and the double back-action rotary cut-and-come-again self-adjusting pumps and self-acting rocking-cradles——

Mr. HOAR. Why do you not invent and make them for yourselves?

Mr. VANCE. I decline to be interrupted. The Senator would not permit me to interrupt him, and he can take his seat now if he pleases.

Mr. HOAR. I will.

Mr. VANCE. And taking these patent medicines and all the traps and contrivances that we buy from New England, and which are protected by a tariff ranging from 50 to 100 per cent., and when we pay our wages to our own laborers and all of those, I think we are paying really twice as much in fact as he is.

Mr. LOGAN. I thought the Senator was opposed to taking the tax off patent medicines.

Mr. VANCE. So we are opposed to taking it off anything down below the revenue standard. I hope the Senator will not be uneasy about patent medicines. We will not tax them so as to be beyond his reach. He needs a liver regulator, I think, right now.

The Senator from Massachusetts did me the honor to deny that machinery and buildings, and real estate on which a factory was located, were capital. He said I did not take that into consideration at all when I read that capital was so much, that labor was so much, that material was so much, and profit so much. I should like to know what constitutes capital if that is not. Where, then, is there any room for capital? If buildings and real estate and machinery do not constitute capital then I am at a loss to understand what does.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator did not deduct capital or any interest on it, or use of it, in his statement.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; I gave the capital.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator merely took those three items, materials, wages, and the price of the product, as he will find if he will look at the extract which he had read.

Mr. VANCE. I gave the capital, and I read the official figures from the speech of Mr. RAY, which I cited. As a matter of course I deducted the profit after discounting the material and the wages, and that as contrasted with the capital showed the per cent. I showed, for instance, that in New Hampshire the capital invested in knit goods was $1,224,000, and the profit was $577,000, making about 48 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The net profit?

Mr. VANCE. The net profit, 48 per cent. The Senator from Massachusetts indulged in some very sarcastic remarks—I cannot exactly remember what they were—about the poverty of the State of North Carolina. If that be so, and it is a poor State compared to Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. I did not say anything about the poverty of North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator said something, as I understood him, about the condition that the State was in in consequence of its clinging to Democratic doctrines.

Mr. HOAR. I alluded to the rate of wages paid its laborers; and the Senator himself began it by alluding to the rate of wages paid in the North.

Mr. VANCE. Undoubtedly. Then he made no remark about the poverty of North Carolina. He did make some remark, however, about the manhood of that country. I should like to ask the Senator when any North Carolina man and Massachusetts man ever met that the latter was lacking in manhood?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator must have strangely misunderstood me. I made no such imputation.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator used the term "manhood."

Mr. HOAR. I dare say I used the word "manhood." I do not know whether I did or not, but I never made any imputation as to manhood in North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I heard the remark imperfectly, but I understood the Senator to attribute both poverty and lack of manhood to North Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. A friend here reminds me that what I said was that in their policy they had failed to appreciate and develop the capacities of their manhood. I was not speaking of manhood in the sense of courage or in the sense of manly dignity; I was speaking of it in regard to this industrial question, that was all.

Mr. VANCE. Very well. I was going to say to the Senator that if I lived in a community that was so much superior in wealth and which had been so much more successful and fortunate in cultivating all the capacities of manhood as it is claimed the State of Massachusetts has been as compared with North Carolina, I would be ashamed, I would scorn to levy a tax for my support upon the inferior State. I would be ashamed to go before the American people and acknowledge, while claiming to have more of civilization, to have more of the capacities of manhood than any other State, to have more wealth than any other State, and to pay higher wages to the poor than any other State, to ask for a law taxing those who can scarcely bear their own burdens to keep up my prosperity.

Where did the prosperity of Massachusetts come from? I acknowledge that they have cultivated the capacities of manhood in some respects to a most extraordinary degree. I acknowledge that a genuine down-eastern Massachusetts Yankee never is satisfied when he has two dollars until he gets three, as the Senator said himself. I acknowledge that probably one of them could go down to North Carolina and take a North Carolina man, and with a jack-knife and a shingle whittle him out of his homestead in about two hours. I acknowledge that. That is one of the capacities of manhood in which they excel, not only North Carolina, for I do not wish to admit that my State is behind any other, but the rest of mankind. They have got rich on this protection afforded to them by a tariff levied upon the consuming and the agricultural portions of the Union. There is no denying that. Else if that be not true why do they hang to it so persistently? If it be not true why resist every attempt here to reduce the taxation upon the people of the country? If it be not true why do they employ lobbies to come here and surround this Capitol and buttonhole members of Congress, not only to prevent any reduction in taxes, but to build up new industries, as they call them? They will tell you about the homes of the workman and about how certain towns are flourishing, and attribute it all to protection. It is the truth, it is all attributable to protection. If you could empty back into the bosom of North Carolina the wealth of which you have stripped her by this robbery in the form of law, as pronounced by your own Supreme Court, she would now be as far ahead in all material resources of Massachusetts as Massachusetts is now ahead of her. Build up industries, that is the way they sustain themselves, by telling how a little town has sprung up here by a water-power and how it has flourished and how thousands have been added to its population, with the profits of its manufactories there, and how its workmen are receiving wages to enable them to put carpets on their floors and have pianos in their parlors, and then say, "You want to disturb all this?" No, I do not want to disturb it, I want to equalize it; that is what I want to do.

I wish you had all the riches in the world that you could earn by the toil of your own hands without taxing me. With just as much propriety, when I ask to have these things equalized and you claim that I ought not to disturb you, might the highway robber when he takes the stranger and shows him the riches in his den tell him how he has prospered by his trade and exclaim, "Why, certainly you do not want to break up all this prosperity?" But the belated traveler on the highway wants it broken up. The people whom I have the honor to represent want a fair and even chance in the world with the people of Massachusetts, and they want no more. I ask for them that they shall be subjected to taxation for the support of the Government and nothing more. I ask that they shall not be subjected to taxation for the benefit of the people of Massachusetts. Sir, it is a want of manhood to ask it; it is not like the great race from which they sprang, to prey on their neighbors in order that they may amass wealth.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interpolate a suggestion right there?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator is incorrect. I certainly want to see him go along on the correct road. We in Illinois differ with the Senator in our views of Massachusetts. He is accusing Massachusetts of having made a fortune and desiring to continue to do so by a protective system. In Illinois we have a different opinion. I venture the assertion that Illinois is to-day a greater protective State than Massachusetts, and that is true——

Mr. VANCE. I did not yield for a speech. I supposed the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. LOGAN. I wanted merely to say that Massachusetts having established her manufactures and got them going and invested her money in them, we are supicious of Massachusetts because we think they want to make a monopoly of manufacturing and reduce the tariff so that we cannot have establishments in the West as we desire to have them. So we do not believe as you do about Massachusetts. We think Massachusetts is nearer favoring a reduction of the tariff than we are in the West for the very reason I have given. So I think the Senator is very much mistaken when he talks about Massachusetts desiring to continue this tariff system for the purpose of embarrassing his State. Such is not the case. We do not believe any such proposition. We are desirous of building up manufacturing industries in the West for the purpose of doing as Massachusetts has done and becoming wealthy, and we suspect that Massachusetts to-day wants to reduce the tariff to prevent us from doing it. There is the difference between the Senator and me on that question.

Mr. VANCE. I should be glad to be informed, if the Senator from Illinois has any information, by vote or speech of any Republican Senator in this Chamber, which would lead him to believe that he is in favor of reducing the tariff on anything except sugar, or it may be taking off the revenue tax on banks, &c.

But I am gratified at one statement the Senator makes. I have always believed that the plains and corn-fields of the West would yet be in alliance with the cotton-fields of the South, and I am glad to see that the Senator from Illinois has at last arrived at that stage of conversion that he has a suspicion of the faithful. There is hope in that, and I hope that he may pursue his inquiries until he arrives at the conclusion that the best thing for him and for his people in that great and fertile country which he represents, as well as for all of us, is to levy simply taxation enough for the support of the Government and to levy no more for any private man's pocket.

Whenever that state of things comes about the South and the West will unite and they will sweep away these odious laws from the statute-book, and if the South then does not make material progress it will be her own fault and she can lay it at the door of no one else.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to the honorable Senator from North Carolina. He totally misconceived the opinion or the desire of the community which I represent. The policy to which they are devoted, the policy named by the great Southern statesman, Henry Clay, as "the American policy," is a policy which they have urged upon their brethren of the South and West. If the Senator from North Carolina thinks that these protected industries are so valuable, what stands in the way of his establishing them in his own State? If his State pays so large tribute to New England for pumps and chains and churns, why do you not invent some for yourselves and give your people the common-school education which enables them to make these inventions?

No, sir; if there is one thing to which Massachusetts has a right to lay claim as an attempted benefit to the people of this country, it is that she has constantly urged upon the people of the South and the people of the West to produce these manufactures at their own doors. The distinguished relative of the Mr. Lawrence whose letter I had read here yesterday, a manufacturer of knit goods, in 1832 in his famous letter to William C. Rives, pointed out to Virginia the great resources of the South.

We think, as Americans, not as New Englanders, that it is a disgrace to American intelligence that the cotton which the honorable Senator raises and that the constituencies of the Senators who sit around him raise, should be transported 3,000 miles over the sea to be made into thread, into cloth, and brought back to clothe the very men the labor of whose hands has raised the cotton. We think it is a foul shame that the intelligence of the mighty State of Texas should any longer permit the hide which she raises, or the wool which grows on the back of her sheep, to be transported to New England half across the continent to be made into shoes or into coats and brought back again half across the continent to the very people who have raised the raw material. And that is the difference between the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Illinois.

I can give an instance of that in my own State. One of the largest shoe manufacturers, one of the largest tanners in this country, twenty years ago had his whole establishment in Worcester. He bought his hides from Illinois very largely, but pretty soon the Chicago people said, "No, if you want to make shoes or tan hides for the people of Illinois you must come out here and make them;" and now this man probably has ten dollars of capital invested in and around Chicago where he has one dollar of capital invested in New England.

I will say one thing for the Senator from North Carolina. He and the people he represents have a large Christian spirit; that is, in the sense of that Christianity which consists in despising the good things of this world, neglecting to avail themselves of them. He goes through the world in the very spirit of the old hymn:

> The flowers which spring along our path
> We scarcely stop to pluck;
> We walk o'er beds of shining ore
> Nor waste one wistful look.

That was not the former spirit. We learned our protective policy of the statesmen of North Carolina in the olden times, of the Badgers and the Mangums. The two great originators of the protective policy of this country were John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, and Henry Clay, of Kentucky. I think there was a time when the honorable Senator himself marched in those ranks, and I think it would have been better for his State and better for him if the doctrine which he preached in his early youth had been carried into effect.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if either Mr. Clay or Mr. Calhoun ever advocated a tariff of 100 per cent. on blankets or flannel goods?

Mr. HOAR. They advocated all the tariff that was necessary.

Mr. VANCE. Why any more necessary now than it was then?

Mr. HOAR. They advocated all of the tariff which was necessary, whether it be 5 per cent. or 50 per cent or 100 per cent., to compel the Englishman who wishes to make cloth from Texan wool, or blankets which can be made of Texan wool, or the cotton cloth which can be made of South Carolina or Georgia cotton to come over here and make them.

Mr. VANCE. And they voted all that was necessary.

Mr. HOAR. This matter of the protective tariff is, when you come to bring it to its last analysis, but a correction of certain existing inequalities and wrongs. England has piled up, accumulated a population many of whom she keeps under her policies in such a degree of poverty and distress that they cannot get money to take them to the seaboard to emigrate. We have here vast fields, vast natural resources awaiting development, waste places in this mighty continent. Now a man in Iowa or Minnesota raises a barrel of flour, and it costs him what is equivalent to three more to take that one barrel of flour to England and exchange it for a suit of clothes.

The English workman makes a suit of clothes for the Iowa laborer, and it costs him three suits of clothes to pay the expense of transporting it to Iowa and making the exchange. So the laborers in each place have paid to the middleman, the capitalist, the railroad, the steamboat, the insurer, the speculator, for every one barrel of flour or one suit of clothes which comes to their own use three times that value to make the exchange. Now the protective tariff says to the Englishman, "If you want to make your suit of clothes for the constituent of the Senator from Illinois, come over and plant yourself by his side and make it, and make the exchange, and you will have on the one hand four barrels of flour and he will have on the other hand four suits of clothes for precisely the same labor."

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me right there to ask if his theory contemplates the time and is looking forward to it when there shall be no foreign demand for the productions of this country? Is that what the gentleman proposes?

Mr. HOAR. I am not going into that now.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is now six o'clock. I am afraid we have got off the question of sugar. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not.

Mr. BAYARD. The question is not debatable.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. On my return to this city yesterday, after an absence of three days, I observed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 22, 1882, the remarks which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I observe in the RECORD of this morning that a person in another place made a wanton attack on my character and committed a breach of the privileges of this body, for which he was not called to order, in discussing a contested-election case. I shall not at this late day be betrayed into a controversy with this individual, whose acquaintance I have never had the misfortune to make, but shall rather leave him to the judgment and contempt of all honorable men for attacking another in a forum where he could not be answered, under cover of the privileges of that forum, for declining to allow the correction of the falsehoods he was uttering, the garbling of the evidence, perversion of the truth, falsification of the record, and for refusing to give the person attacked the benefit of his own statement. I have withstood the mastiffs of the radical party in the past, and can afford to dismiss with this brief notice the yelping of this cur of low degree. The name of this creature I believe is SAMUEL H. MILLER.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I now send to the Clerk's desk the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 21, 1882, and ask that the paragraphs marked be read. They are found on pages 1 and 2 of the RECORD of that day.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a point of order. There is no personal privilege involved in this question. We understand what it is thoroughly.

Mr. O'NEILL. There is a question of personal privilege involved here on the part of my colleague from Pennsylvania, and he ought to be heard. If it were a question of personal privilege on the part of the Senator from South Carolina, it is certainly as much a question of privilege on the part of my colleague.

Mr. CARLISLE. While the gentleman may feel aggrieved by something contained in the extract just read, yet the rules of the House forbid allusions here to what transpired in the other House, as the rules in that House forbid reference there to what transpires here; and unless there can be a line drawn somewhere, Mr. Speaker, this House, it seems to me, is in danger of getting into inextricable confusion and interminable discussions and disputes with members in the other end of the Capitol. Now, inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has had an opportunity on this floor to say what he desired to say in reference to the gentleman who uttered those words, and that gentleman has seen proper to take some notice of them at the other end of the Capitol, the matter ought to stop.

Mr. MILLER. I have observed in this House, Mr. Speaker, that members have sent to the Clerk's desk to be read articles from newspapers——

A MEMBER. Entirely too much of it altogether——

Mr. MILLER. Which were not authenticated by any person, but rising in their seats to a question of personal privilege in reference to what might be contained therein. The RECORD, which I send to the Clerk's desk, is the official record of the proceedings of this body, and it seems, sir, from that RECORD that some one, at the other end of the Capitol it may be, has seen fit to impugn the veracity, the truthfulness, the correctness of the statements made on the floor of the House.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] says we must draw the line somewhere. It strikes me that if the members of this House have any regard for the dignity of this body it should be drawn when one speaking in a co-ordinate branch of the Government rises in his seat and uses unparliamentary language toward a member of the House which appears in that RECORD. I ask, therefore, that the remarks which I have marked in the RECORD of the 21st instant be read. I ask it as my right as a member of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no objection to the reading of the remarks which the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks to have read. I wish to say that I take no part in this controversy on the one side or the other, having no purpose to discuss its merits. But the point of order I make is in the interest of order in the House and the interest of correct proceedings in the Congress of the United States. If we are to enter upon controversies here on this floor, if we are to have controversies on this floor between members of the House and members of the Senate, it seems to me there will be absolutely no end to it. It is a violation of parliamentary law and of the rules of this House. While I disclaim——

Mr. ERRETT. The remarks made in the Senate in reference to my colleague were in utter violation of parliamentary rules, and those remarks having been made, my colleague certainly has the right to be heard in reply.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have already said they were in violation of parliamentary law, but if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is allowed to proceed here, then the gentleman in the other end of the Capitol will proceed there, and without discussing the merits of the controversy at all I say there can be no doubt that the first allusion was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to say, I am informed the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania alluded not to the Senator from South Carolina for anything which took place in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. MILLER. Not one word was uttered as to anything that took place in the Senate, but it was as to what occurred before he was a member of that body.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no purpose to go into the merits of the controversy.

Mr. REED. I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky for what it is worth that the gentleman from Pennsylvania in speaking on the floor of this House violated no rule of the House, because he did not allude to any transaction in the Senate, while on the contrary the speech which was made in another place was made in reference to a transaction which took place in the House, and evidently by personal solicitation was made especially offensive by being printed on the first page at the head of the first column of the RECORD, evidently by an arrangement of some kind or other, because other speeches were in before it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I know nothing about that, of course.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to state this, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. KASSON. What constitutes a question of privilege of this nature is clearly stated in our rules:

Second. The rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] evidently in the paragraph already read was attacked in his representative capacity for what occurred on this floor, and whatever may have preceded it, it certainly is a question of privilege for him to explain in proper terms. And I hope, (and I express the hope most earnestly,) he will not imitate the language in another place on that subject, but will in a manly way respond on this floor to the impeachment of his representative conduct in that speech.

Now, sir, that is clearly in order; but if the gentleman from Pennsylvania goes beyond that he is liable in his turn to be called to order as, in my judgment, the gentleman should have been who uttered what he did in another place.

I say this irrespective of the merits of the controversy. No one can regret more profoundly than myself that either here or there there should have been language uttered where there was no opportunity to reply. That is the admitted and indisputable record. But on the point of order I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to speak in order as to what concerns his reputation as a member of the House.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, in the first place the gentleman from Pennsylvania did violate the rules of this House in making reference to a member of the other body. He alluded to him repeatedly as "now a Senator from South Carolina," and that gentleman simply responded to what he and what everybody disposed to be fair and just will regard as an unjustifiable and unwarranted attack on his character. It seems to me, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] has already said, there must be an end put to this sort of controversy somewhere. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] declined to be interrupted so that any correction of the statements he was making might be made to this House.

I made an effort to correct one or two of his statements, but he declined to be interrupted. Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that there is nothing in this subject which presents really a question of privilege. The language used by the gentleman referred to as a member of another body does not make any charges of corruption or any charge affecting the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his representative capacity. Therefore it does not strike me that there is any question whatever of privilege involved in the matter.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made that the matter which has been just read from the RECORD does not present a question of personal privilege. These questions are always very delicate ones for the Chair to undertake to dispose of. It seems to the Chair, leaving entirely out of view the question as to the source from whence these remarks came, that they constitute an attack upon the reputation and the conduct of a member of this body, not only individually but in his representative capacity. They make an attack upon him or a charge of improper conduct in debate, and in that view the Chair would be disposed to hold, although very much inclined against the practice of allowing the time of the House to be taken up by members in answering personal attacks from any source or of any kind, and the Chair thinks a strong case should be made to present a question of privilege.

The question now is whether or not the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall be permitted to make an explanation of the matters with which he is charged by a Senator of the United States. Without undertaking to open the door at all, or to break down the well-established parliamentary rule that what is said in one body shall not be referred to or assailed in another—a wise and good rule in the judgment of the Chair—without undertaking to attack that, or, as the Chair has stated, to break down that practice, the Chair is inclined to hold that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may make an explanation of his own conduct entirely disconnected with any assault upon the Senator. If he in any respect by remarks of his own assails the Senator whose remarks appeared in the RECORD and which have been read, the Chair thinks he should be promptly called to order. Whatever would be simply in the nature of a fair explanation of what has been said, or of what he said upon the floor of the House, would be only just to himself, it would be just to the House and perhaps just to the Senator referred to.

In holding thus the Chair thinks it goes to the very verge, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky; and were the Chair to permit an explanation of this kind to go beyond this the Houses would be likely to get into interminable disputations. The rule ought to be strictly applied in this House, to the end at least that attacks of a personal character on Senators should not be made and criminations and recriminations between members and Senators should not be indulged in. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding when the gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke on the election case. Within the limits indicated, therefore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. MILLER. I now ask the Clerk to read what I have marked of my speech lately published in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Friday, July 7, General M. C. Butler, one of the present Senators from that State, and who lived at Edgefield Court-House, in the county of Edgefield, left his home for Hamburgh, ostensibly for the purpose of trying the case on the part of the prosecution before the trial justice. He reached Hamburgh between two and three o'clock in the afternoon.

* * * * * * *

The Chronicle and Sentinel, a Democratic paper published in Augusta, adds the further fact that General Butler went over from Hamburgh across the bridge into Augusta. Saw young men over there and said to them, "Things over in Hamburgh look squally, young men; we may want you over there; get yourselves in readiness." The editor of the paper further says that these young men, fully armed, and to the number of two hundred or three hundred, went over to Hamburgh shortly afterward.

* * * * * * *

I am sustained in all that I have said and more too by the record found in the "report upon the denial of elective franchise in South Carolina at the State and national elections of 1876," which was prepared by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Senator CAMERON, in 1877, by order of the United States Senate, and I commend Democrats and Republicans to read it, for it details deeds of horror and of bloodshed that excite the pity and sympathy of any man not heartless or inhuman, even living in a society described by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Tillman,] as he says, where there are barbarians.

Mr. EVINS. Allow me to correct one statement.

Mr. MILLER. Wait until I get through and then you can do it.

Mr. EVINS. I simply want to say right here, in justice to Senator BUTLER, he was not there at all.

Mr. MILLER. There is no necessity for a controversy. The evidence reported by Senator CAMERON, of Wisconsin, shows conclusively that he was present, and the Charleston News and Courier of July 10, 1876, a Democratic journal, stated positively he was present and in command. So also does the Augusta Chronicle and Sentinel, a Democratic journal published just across the river from Hamburgh.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in order to show that the statements I then made were not garbling of the evidence, were not perversions of the truth, were not falsifications of the record, I send to the Clerk's desk volume 3 of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 48 of the Forty-fourth Congress, second session, and I ask that the Clerk shall read the report of the attorney-general of South Carolina to Governor Chamberlain, bearing date July 12, 1876. It is found on pages 473, 474, and 475 of the document to which I refer. I do not wish to take up the time of the House with having it read now, and if there is no objection, therefore, I will simply incorporate it as a part of my remarks.

There was no objection.

Attorney-General Stone's report of the Hamburgh massacre.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Columbia, S. C., July 12, 1876.

SIR: According to your request of Monday last I have visited Hamburgh for the purpose of ascertaining the facts connected with the killing of several men there on the night of the 8th of July.

My information has been derived chiefly from Trial-Justice Rivers, and from the testimony of persons who have been examined before the coroner's jury now in session, and from those who received wounds from the armed body of white men who had taken them prisoners.

From this information the following facts seem to be clearly established:

During the administration of Governor Scott a company of State militia was organized at Hamburgh, of which Prince Rivers was captain. This company was known as Company A, Ninth Regiment National Guard of the State of South Carolina. Arms were at that time furnished to it, and some ammunition. This company, previous to May, 1876, had for some time but few names on its rolls, drilled rarely, and scarcely kept alive its organization. But in May of this year the number of members increased to about eighty, and one Doc Adams was chosen captain.

On the 4th of July the company drilled on one of the public streets in the town of Hamburgh. The street on which they drilled was between one hundred and one hundred and fifty feet wide, but it was little used, and was overgrown with grass, except in that portion which was used as a carriage-road. While the company was thus drilling, Thomas Butler and Henry Getzen, his brother-in-law, came along in a carriage, and demanded that the company should make way for them. Adams halted the company, remonstrated with Butler and Getzen for thus seeking to interfere with the company, and called their attention to the fact that there was plenty of room on each side of the company to pass.

Finding them unwilling to turn out of their course, Adams finally opened ranks and allowed them to drive through.

This incident seems to have angered Butler and Getzen, who made complaint before Trial-Justice Rivers against the militia company for obstructing the highway. The trial-justice on the following day issued a warrant against Adams, as he was the captain of the company, and had him brought before him for trial. During the progress of the trial Adams was arrested by the trial-justice for contempt of court, and subsequently the case was continued until four o'clock Saturday afternoon, July 8.

At that time Butler and Getzen, with General M. C. BUTLER, who had been employed by Robert J. Butler, father of the former, as their attorney, repaired to the office of the trial-justice, but Adams did not appear.

General Butler inquired as to the nature of the charges against Adams, and asked if the trial-justice was to hear the case as trial-justice or in his official capacity of major-general of militia.

To this the trial-justice replied that he was to hear the case as a trial-justice, but if the facts showed that a military offense had been committed, Adams would have to be tried by a court-martial.

General Butler then stated that he thought the case might be arranged, and at his suggestion time was given him to see the parties.

After this the trial-justice did not see General Butler at his office, but learned that he had gone over to Augusta.

In the mean time the trial-justice had been informed that some two hundred or three hundred armed white men were in Hamburgh, and that a demand had been made by them that the militia should surrender their arms. After a consultation with Messrs. Jefferson and Spencer, Rivers sent for General Butler. He rode up to the back gate of Rivers's house. The two had a conversation, in which General Butler said that he had given orders to have the guns given up in half an hour, and the time was nearly up.

Rivers asked if some other arrangement could not be made, to which General Butler replied in the negative.

Rivers then asked if he would not consent to have him receive the arms, box them up, and send them to the governor. To which General Butler replied, that he would box them up and send them to the governor, and if he, the governor, should return them to the company it would be at his own risk. Rivers then asked if they would give a bond for the arms, to which General Butler said that he would stand the bond, and turning to another person—I think R. J. Butler—asked if he wouldn't go on bond also, to which he replied that he would.

Rivers then asked for time before fire should be opened on the militia, so that he might have a conference with the militia officers. This was acceded to, and Rivers then went to the building known as the Sibley building, in the second story of which the company had its armory and drill-room, and where it was then assembled, and told Captain Adams what might be expected if he should refuse to give up the arms. To this Adams replied that General Butler had no right to the guns; that the company held them, and he proposed to hold them unless General Butler showed some authority to take them.

After this interview Rivers returned to General Butler, with whom was Robert J. Butler. He told them the decision to which the company had come. Then Robert J. Butler said that General Butler was his attorney; that he had come to settle the matter. If the company would apologize for the insult to his son and son-in-law he would do nothing more; but the whole matter was in General Butler's hands. General Butler said that, as the men would not meet him, he would have no more to do with them. General Butler was asked by Rivers if he would guarantee the safety of the town should the militia surrender their arms. He said that would depend on how the men behaved themselves afterward.

This statement is confirmed by S. P. Pixley.

While these negotiations were going on the armed body of white men in the town were concentrated on the bank of the river near the Sibley building. Soon after they were broken off firing began. Men who were in the building say that it was commenced by the whites firing upon the building. Adams gave his orders not to shoot until he directed them to. The company had very little ammunition, and all they had was a portion of that issued to the company when it was first organized.

After the firing had begun it was returned by the militia, and one of the attacking party, McKee Merriwether, was shot through the head and instantly killed. After this a piece of artillery, said to belong to the Washington Artillery of Augusta, was brought over from Augusta, and four charges of canister were fired from it upon the armory, but without injuring any one. The persons in the armory escaped from the rear by means of ladders, and hid under floors of adjacent buildings, or wherever else they could find shelter.

The first man killed by the whites was James Cook, town marshal. He had been in the armory, but was not a member of the company. He had gone into the street from the rear of the Sibley building, and was at once fired on and fell dead instantly, pierced by five or six bullets.

Afterward the whites began their search for the members of the company. They succeeded in getting about twenty-five colored men as prisoners, some of whom were never members of the company. As fast as they were captured they were taken to a place near the South Carolina Railroad, where a large party of armed men stood guard over them.

None of those thus captured had arms in their hands.

Subsequently, and at about two o'clock a. m., six men took A. T. Attaway out of the "ring." He and his mother begged for his life, but in vain. He was then told to turn round, and was then shot to death by the crowd.

David Phillips was next taken out, and was similarly killed.

Pompey Curry was next called out. He recognized among the bystanders Henry Getzen and Dr. Pierce Butler, and called on them to keep the other men from killing him. He ran, and was shot at as he ran, one bullet striking him in the right leg below the knee.

Afterward, Albert Mynyard, Moses Parks, and Hampton Stevens were killed. Stevens did not belong to the company. Nelder John Parker, who has been commonly referred to in the newspaper reports as John Thomas, was corporal in the company.

When he was arrested and taken to the spot where the other prisoners were he recognized among the party two gentlemen of Augusta, named Twiggs and Chaffee. He appealed to them for protection. They said he should not be hurt. He states that General M. C. BUTLER asked if he was one of the d——d rascals. The reply was in the affirmative. He was then shot in the back. Messrs. Twiggs and Chaffee then said if he was shot again they would shoot the ones who did it. They took him off and had him taken to Augusta. He was shot before Attaway was killed. He may recover from his wounds.

One Butler Edwards was taken as a prisoner. He says he was taken before General Butler, who, at the time, was in the street near the Sibley building. This was about twelve o'clock.

Threats were made to shoot him. General Butler directed that he be taken to the others. He recognized among the crowd one Captain Carwile and —— Dunbar, of Augusta; said he had a long talk with the former. He was among the prisoners who were let loose and told to run; as they ran they were fired at, and he was shot in the head. He was not a member of the company.

Willis Davis, one of the members of the company, was taken to the place where were the other prisoners. The men stated that John Swaringen, of Edgefield County, had charge of the prisoners. He states that he saw General Butler before the men were killed, who asked him what he was doing, and told him he would have enough of it before he got through.

He was shot in the arm near the elbow, when about twenty paces distant from the crowd. The ball is still in his arm, and he suffers much pain. He also states that some of the young men from Georgia remonstrated against shooting the prisoners, but in vain.

Besides the killing and wounding of the men herein named, the party broke open several stores and houses, and in some instances robbed the inmates. They took from Mr. Charles Roll, the postmaster, and a very respectable white citizen, a gun which he had in his store, and his private property. From an old colored man named Jacob Samuels, in his employ, they took a watch and set fire to his house. They broke open the house of Trial-Justice Rivers and did much damage, as well as robbed him of clothing. They obtained kerosene oil and attempted to set fire to a house, but were prevented by Colonel A. P. Butler from doing so. The ropes of the public wells were cut and some fences were torn down.

So far as I can learn, the primary object of the whites was to take away from the militia their arms.

The man Parker, who was wounded, states that on Friday, the 7th instant, he had a long talk with one Harrison Butler, (white,) on Broad street, Augusta. Butler told him that if Rivers did not give orders for the militia to give up their arms they would take them away on the next day.

On Saturday rumors were abroad in Hamburgh that there were armed parties coming in to take the guns, but little credit was attached to them.

One of the white citizens of Hamburgh heard a conversation between David Phillips and General Butler in the afternoon. Phillips talked very "big," as the gentleman said, and General Butler told him that they wanted those guns and were bound to have them.

In the afternoon Colonel A P. Butler went to the various stores in town and told the proprietors that they must not sell any liquor to his men. In spite of this, however, some of the men compelled one of the storekeepers to furnish them liquor. From the same person they obtained kerosene oil to use in setting fire to a house.

The whites were armed with guns and small-arms of various kinds, and many of them had axes and hatchets.

It is proper to state that the intendent of Hamburgh, Mr. Gardner, was informed by General Butler, in an interview with him, that the arms of the company must be given up.

Trial-Justice Rivers is now holding an inquest and taking the testimony of witnesses. Until their verdict is rendered it will be impossible to tell who were engaged in the attack on the militia and the subsequent killing and wounding of the colored men.

It may be possible that a careful judicial investigation may show some slight errors in some of the minor details stated in this report. But, making due allowance for such errors, the facts show the demand on the militia to give up their arms was made by persons without lawful authority to enforce such demand or to receive the arms had they been surrendered; that the attack on the militia to compel a compliance with this demand was without lawful excuse or justification; and that after there had been some twenty or twenty-five prisoners captured and completely in the power of their captors, and without means of making further resistance, five of them were deliberately shot to death and three more severely wounded.

It further appears that, not content with thus satisfying their vengeance, many of the crowd added to their guilt the crime of robbery of defenseless people, and were only prevented from arson by the efforts of their own leaders.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILLIAM STONE.
Attorney-General of South Carolina.

Hon. D. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Governor.

Mr. MILLER. I further ask, Mr. Speaker, to print with my remarks the report of the coroner's jury which sat in the town of Hamburgh between the 9th and the 29th days of July, 1876. It will be found on pages 485, 486, 487, and 488 of the same report. The jury examined a large number of witnesses who were present at that unfortunate affair, and made a report to the proper court in the county of Aiken and State of South Carolina, shortly after the 29th of July in the year mentioned, wherein they stated under oath that the facts which I cited upon this floor were true and more than true. I ask, therefore, to print with my remarks the findings of this jury.

There was no objection.

I refer to the editorial article published at that time which I ask to print with my remarks.

[From the Augusta Sentinel and Chronicle, July 9, 1876.]

THIS HAS GONE ON LONG ENOUGH.

After waiting some time General Butler told Rivers that he must proceed. The constable then went to the door and called Adams, who, however, failed to answer. It was then ascertained that Adams, with his company, was up the street in a defiant attitude. General Butler thereupon informed Rivers that this sort of thing had gone on long enough, and that it was about time that it was put a stop to. The negroes must give up their arms at once, and he would give the names of twenty of the best citizens in Edgefield as security that they would be turned over to Governor Chamberlain. Rivers then asked if General Butler, in case the arms were given up, would see that the town was protected during the night. General Butler answered in the affirmative. Rivers assured him that he would go immediately to Adams and persuade him to give up the arms. He accordingly went to that worthy and talked with him for some time. Upon his return he told General Butler that the mayor, Gardner, and the officers of the company would confer with him at the council chamber. General Butler accordingly went thither and had a conference with the negro leaders. He told them that the arms must be given up; there was no necessity for them in that place and they had no business with them. As for the Adams case, Mr. Butler would be satisfied if Adams would make an apology.

THEY INTENDED TO FIGHT.

This conference accomplished nothing. The negroes still hesitated about giving up the arms. In the mean time, however, a number of white citizens had assembled in the town and matters began to look squally. General Butler rode over to Augusta and told several young men that he might need their services in Hamburgh during the afternoon. He then returned to the town. Just after crossing the bridge he was met by Prince Rivers, who said he would make one more effort to induce the negroes to give up their guns, and if they would not yield they must take the consequence. Accordingly he conferred with the officers of the company, and shortly returned to General Butler with the announcement that the negroes said they would not give up their guns; they intended to fight. In the mean time the news of the trouble had spread in Augusta and caused much excitement. A large number of young men hastily procured arms and ammunition and hastened to the scene. Many others waited at the foot of the bridge anxiously awaiting the result. By seven o'clock there was a large crowd at that point.

OPENING FIRE.

Upon learning the result of Rivers's efforts General Butler determined to accomplish by force that which could not be done by peaceable demands. The negroes had intrenched themselves in a large brick structure known as Sibley's building, on a corner, and defied the whites. The latter surrounded the house, and at half-past seven o'clock opened fire upon it. This was returned by the negroes, and a constant fusillade was kept up for over two hours.

TWENTY-NINE PRISONERS.

About twelve o'clock general search was made throughout the town, and resulted in the finding of fifteen more negroes, making twenty-nine in all. A negro who attempted to escape was shot in several places and badly wounded. The negro lieutenant, John Thomas, who, as stated above, was shot in the back, was expected to die from the wound. A young man named Morgan was accidentally shot in the leg by one of his comrades while pursuing a fleeing negro. He was firing at the negro, together with others, at the time. His wound, while painful, was not considered dangerous. The negroes who were last captured were discovered hid away in cellars and under floors.

Mr. MILLER. I ask further to publish an editorial article found in the same document on pages 605-6, from the Charleston News and Courier, dated July 10, a Democratic paper published in Charleston, South Carolina.

There was no objection.

[From the Charleston News and Courier (Democratic) of July 10, 1876.]

THE BLOODY WORK AT HAMBURGH.

Assuming that the accounts of the Hamburgh fight given by the Augusta newspapers are in the main correct, we find little, if any, excuse for the conflict itself, and absolutely none for the cowardly killing of the seven negro prisoners, who were shot down like rabbits, long after they had surrendered.

The insolence of the negro militiaman, out of which the trouble came, could easily have been punished without a resort to arms. General Butler, who appears to have been in command of the whites, admitted that an apology by the militiaman would satisfy his clients. The affront to Mr. Butler, therefore, was not the immediate cause of the fight that followed. This was brought on by the demand that the militiamen surrender their arms into the keeping of the whites. The presence of armed bodies of negroes is a menace to any community; but we do not understand that the danger was such as to justify the whites in demanding the surrender of the arms, or in laying siege to the house in which the negroes took refuge, and killing the negroes who attempted to escape. The killing of seven of the prisoners was barbarous in the extreme.

We have no words strong enough to express our condemnation of such a crime. They who do such deeds sow the wind. We pray that they, and those who are innocent of the wrong, may not reap the whirlwind.

It pains us to be forced to speak in this strain of any act done in South Carolina by white men; but the higher intelligence and culture of the whites imposes on them the duty of self-reverence and self-control. When they give way to passion and revenge, when they kill unarmed prisoners, they do what, as soldiers, they would not have dreamed of doing; they wrong themselves, their State, and increase a hundredfold the difficulties and dangers of our political and social future.—Charleston News and Courier, July 10, 1876.

Mr. MILLER. I further ask——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. I understand it to be the duty of the Speaker of the House when a gentleman is out of order to call him to order. I understand from the gentleman's own statement that these extracts which he is asking to have published are part of an effort to prove some disreputable conduct on the part of a Senator. Under such circumstances, I ask, should not the Speaker call him to order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be seeking to establish anything against the gentleman from South Carolina in his capacity as Senator. If the Chair so understood, it would call the gentleman to order.

Mr. MILLER. All this took place before he was elected Senator. With the other extracts I also ask to have published in my remarks a letter from a special correspondent of the Charleston News and Courier, furnished by the reporter of that paper, which will be found on pages 606 and 607 of the Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 48, volume 3.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I object.

Mr. MILLER. Then I ask that that be read. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked on pages 606 and 607 of the Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 48 of the Fourty-fourth Congress, second session.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the special correspondent of the Charleston News and Courier, Democratic.]

THE HAMBURGH SLAUGHTER.

Frightful excesses of the Edgefield Regulators—Yesterday's reports fully confirmed—The particulars of the killing of the prisoners—Their bodies mutilated and their houses sacked—Prince Rivers flees for his life—The indignation in Augusta.

[Special dispatch to the News and Courier.]

AUGUSTA, GEORGIA, July 10.

The account of the Hamburgh affair which appeared in the News and Courier this morning is so full and correct that but little remains to be told. I have spent the day in Hamburgh and Augusta, making diligent inquiry in every possible direction, and the facts here given may be relied upon.

The origin of the difficulty has been correctly given and need not be repeated here. Doc Adams having defied the authority of Prince Rivers, in real or pretended fear of the armed parties who had been coming in during the day from Edgefield and Aiken Counties to the number of about two hundred, took possession of his company's drill-room with about twenty-five men and declared his intention of resisting to the last. General Butler sent him word that he would give him a half hour to surrender his arms, and waited for about this length of time. No sign of yielding having appeared, fire was opened (I know not whether by General Butler's order or not) upon the building, and was returned by the besieged.

At the end of a half hour Merriwether, who was firing from behind the bridge pier, was killed by a shot from the windows, as already described. His death exasperated his friends to the highest degree, and, their fire making no impression upon the house, they sent to Augusta for an old cannon, a six-pounder, placing it in an exposed position within fifty yards of the house. They fired four rounds of canister, which drove the negroes from their stronghold, and ended all appearance of fight.

The chief of police (Cook) and Moses Park were killed about this time in attempting to escape. The remainder of the party secreted themselves under several houses in the block, which was now entirely surrounded, and in a little while all were captured, some with arms in their hands. The prisoners were marched off a hundred yards and compelled to lie down, surrounded by their guards. They were kept in this manner for some time, when Attaway, Dan Phillips, Albert Minion, and Hamp Stevens were called out singly and shot to death on the abutment of the wagon-bridge, and in full view of a large number of spectators. Pompey Curry, when his name was called, rose suddenly and dashed off through the high road, escaping with a bullet through his leg.

* * * * * * * *

The bodies of the slain negroes were left lying where they fell. Each spot is marked with blood to-day. One or two of the bodies were mutilated with hatchets or bayonets, Attaway's being one of these. One of the four negroes lived until next morning, and died from loss of blood.

The feeling in Augusta among the better class is one of unqualified condemnation. All are agreed that the affair cannot be justified on any grounds. It was the work of some of the band who had inflamed themselves with liquor during the fight.

The negroes of Hamburgh fled by scores to Augusta for protection, but all are returning to-day. A number of their houses were broken into and robbed, and the furniture destroyed. Prince Rivers's house was sacked. His loss is several hundred dollars. The band hunted for him to kill him also, but he had escaped.

The feeling among the negroes in Hamburgh is that of terrified submission. All the killed had families, with one exception, (Moses Park,) and the grief and distress of the women and children were violent and heart-rending.

Total killed: Negroes, seven; whites, one. Wounded: Negroes, four; whites, one. General Butler is absent, and I have not been able to see him.

[During the reading of the above article the following colloquy took place:

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. I say the allusion to a gentleman who is now a Senator is out of order.

Mr. MILLER. He was not a Senator when that was written.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that in the former remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania he made any reference to the gentleman from South Carolina as a Senator.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I know the truth is that what is stated there is not the fact. But the gentleman is putting it on the record again as if it were, and to that I object as out of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call attention to the fact that in the very first sentence the gentleman from Pennsylvania uttered in reference to this South Carolina matter he said he spoke in reference to a gentleman who now occupied the position of a Senator at the other end of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER.. The Chair would himself call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order if he were making any attack on the gentleman at the other end of the Capitol in his capacity as a Senator; but this is a matter of history that relates to a period long anterior to the gentleman's election to the Senate.

Mr. ATHERTON. And the whole trouble grew out of the fact that this had reference to something which had no connection with the election case at all.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is having read an article which states that General Butler led the white forces in a certain massacre and applies that language to a Senator when it has been distinctly shown the General Butler there mentioned was not the gentleman who is now the Senator at all.

Mr. REED. That is not a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is now using that extract for the purpose of applying it to a Senator of the United States, and I submit it is a violation of every rule of propriety and of parliamentary decorum as between the two bodies.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state what connection the Hamburgh matter had with the election case of Tillman and Smalls?

Mr. REED. That is not a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the Clerk to continue the reading.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the article.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not make a word of comment on this terrible record of crime. Had not the Senator from South Carolina charged me with "garbling the evidence," "perversion of the truth," and "falsification of the record," I could not have been induced to unfold this story of wrong. The testimony which I have referred to was collated by a Senate committee composed of Senators ANGUS CAMERON, I. P. Christiancy, and A. S. Merrimon, the same having been taken under a Senate resolution of December 5, 1876. To so much of his unparliamentary remarks as is personal to me I would not if I could reply in kind. I was early taught that a gentleman is as choice of language in a parliamentary body as in the social circle. The language used by the Senator from South Carolina on July 21st only emphasizes the necessity of such ethics. To imitate his language would be distasteful to me, a breach of the decorum of this House, and an affront to the intelligent, courteous, and well-bred people, irrespective of party, of the district which I have the honor to represent on this floor.

Such conduct on my part would forfeit the confidence and esteem of my partisan friends and the respect of the orderly Democracy of the twenty-sixth Pennsylvania district. If such a civilization does not exist in South Carolina to-day I most sincerely regret it. If it does, then I remand the vaporing Senator to it, trusting and believing that his remarks will receive the condemnation they merit from the descendants of a chivalrous ancestry, not forgetful of Addison's truism, that "Title and ancestry render a good man illustrious, but an ill one contemptible."

Mr. EVINS. I ask the indulgence of the House for a very few moments. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina is fully able to take care of himself; but I think, as his colleague, something is due from me upon the present occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I do not envy any man whose hyena-like instincts lead him to revel amid the putrid bones of the past. The member from Pennsylvania traveled out of his way in the speech he made in the election case the other day to make a most unwarrantable and unjustifiable attack upon a Senator at the other end of the Capitol. He was not content with simply reciting the testimony in regard to the massacre at Hamburgh, which occurred years ago, and had nothing whatever to do with the issue before the House, but he went out of his way to impugn the motives with which that distinguished gentleman went to Hamburgh on that occasion.

Now, sir, what right has the member from Pennsylvania to sit in judgment on the motives of anybody? He has referred to the Democracy of his own district. I have no doubt the Democracy as well as the Republicans of his own district know very well what estimate to put on what he may say here or elsewhere.

The facts about this matter—I do not intend to go into them at all—prove that General Butler in pursuance of a professional engagement went to Hamburgh to defend a gentleman of his own name but not related to him.

The condition of things in South Carolina at that time was such that we might be said to have been without law; everything was threatening, riot and disturbance were unchecked during the days of this infamous carpet-bag rule in the State, every man carried his life in his hands. The distinguished Senator himself had his house burned over his head; hundreds of gin-houses were burned in different parts of the State. This place, Hamburgh, was the most lawless place in South Carolina. It was filled almost entirely with colored people, under the lead of vicious men, who took control of matters and attempted to administer the law with their own hands. While General Butler was at Hamburgh on that occasion this riot occurred. During its progress that day everybody apprehended that the most serious results would grow out of it. These colored people were armed with muskets and fixed ammunition given them by the authority of the State, and commenced the firing. During the day General Butler repeatedly, at the imminent risk of his own life, attempted to save the lives of these colored people, and put an end to further disturbance.

I said, when I attempted to interrupt the member from Pennsylvania the other day, for the purpose of correcting his statement—and I had to do it while he was speaking, for he would not stop for me to say it in order—"that when these negroes were murdered at night or early next morning, General Butler was far away; was not there at all." The evidence is overwhelming that he was not there. He did everything that it was possible to do to prevent the horrors of that massacre. And that night when these murders occurred he was six miles away at the house of Colonel Robert Butler, the gentleman whose son he had defended that day. He went there without any apprehension that anything further would be done.

I shall ask to publish as a part of my remarks the statement of General Butler himself, under oath, in regard to this matter. While the member from Pennsylvania was quoting the testimony of these wild, unlettered negroes, given to this committee, exaggerated in every possible form, many of them giving testimony who were not there at all, he had not the manliness to give the distinguished Senator the benefit of his own statement. Yet the gentleman talks about dealing fairly and candidly in this matter.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that leave be granted to the gentleman to print General Butler's statement.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Of course there is no objection to that.

Mr. KASSON. I want it to go upon record that there is no objection.

Many MEMBERS. No objection!

Mr. EVINS. I say what I know, and I say it with feeling, that there is no man on this continent who has been so outrageously slandered and libeled as the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. He is too brave and too self-reliant to feel it incumbent on him to hunt up the slanderers wherever they have chosen to raise their heads against him. He has gone forward irrespective of them, trusting to time and to the justice of his fellow-citizens to vindicate his character from such foul aspersions, and he is willing to leave it there still.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I have said all that is necessary or proper for me to say.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. EVINS. One moment; I have not yielded the floor. I want to correct one statement made by the member from Pennsylvania when he asserted, as I understood him, that this report was the unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. MILLER. I did not say it was the united report of the committee. I said that the report would be found in the miscellaneous document which I had indicated in my remarks, which document contains testimony taken by three Senators whom I named.

Mr. EVINS. I understood him to say that these members of the Senate who made this investigation agreed to this report.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. No; he did not say that.

The following is the testimony given by General Butler before the Senate committee.

Answer. I am very happy, indeed, to have the opportunity to do so. There has been so much said about it, so many misstatements have been made, so much bitterness exhibited by the partisan newspapers, that I am very happy in having an opportunity to be able to put upon record, before a tribunal of this kind, my testimony, under oath, in reference to it.

The first knowledge I had of the Hamburgh matter was communicated to me by Colonel Thomas P. Shaw, at Edgefield Court-House. This difficulty occurred on Saturday the 8th of July. On Friday evening, the 7th of July, Colonel Shaw, with his brother, the Rev. William Shaw, came to Edgefield Court-House to confer with me upon some professional business, together with Mr. Norris and Mr. Addison, which business, I presume, it is unnecessary to mention. At any rate, they came upon professional business with me. After getting through with the business in Mr. Norris's office, Colonel Shaw said to me that Mr. Robert J. Butler desired me to be in Hamburgh at four o'clock the next evening, to represent himself and his son-in-law in a trial there.

Q. I will ask you right here if you are any relation to Robert J. Butler who sent for you on that occasion?

A. None at all.

Q. Are you any relation to A. P. Butler, who has been examined here to-day?

A. None at all.

Q. He belongs to a different family entirely?

A. Yes; Colonel Shaw even went so far as to say that Mr. Butler mentioned the fee of $25. He said that if I would come down there the following day he would pay me $25. I said to Colonel Shaw that he might say to Mr. Butler that as at present advised I should go if I could get any conveyance, as the time for the train had already passed. Well, I did succeed, about nine o'clock the next morning, in getting a buggy, and I hitched my horse to it and went. I heard from Colonel Shaw that there had been some disturbance at Hamburgh between these young men and the negroes, but the character of it he did not know. I took the buggy and left Edgefield, I suppose, about nine o'clock. The weather was very hot, and after reaching a point about seven miles from the village I met Dr. George Wise coming down the hill just as I reached what is known as Horse Creek. He asked me if I had heard the news from Hamburgh——

(Mr. CHRISTIANCY objected to the conversation between witness and Dr. Wise.)

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the matter definitely understood as to what testimony I may be allowed to give. I have seen the evidence given by these negroes and other people with reference to myself, and it seems to me that there was no limit to the statements that they made when they felt called upon to malign and traduce my character; and I think it would be a very great hardship if I in vindicating myself should be restricted to the rules of evidence.

Mr. CAMERON. It has been our endeavor from the beginning to restrict them within the rules of evidence. Sometimes witnesses have departed from that rule and made statements before we could stop them, but it has been the endeavor of the committee to hold every witness as nearly as possible to the rules of evidence.

The WITNESS. If that has been your purpose, I must say that it seems to me that the committee has failed most consummately in doing it, because I have read Dr. Adams's testimony, and he has stated what he has heard, and the messages that I sent and the messages that he sent. I simply say this in justice to myself.

Mr. CAMERON. That was in the matter of the negotiations that were carried on.

The WITNESS. No, sir; however, I do not propose to argue that point with the committee. I will simply state, then, that I do not want to transgress any of the rules, and I shall not do it if I know it. I think it my duty, however, to say that I have nothing whatever to conceal about this matter, and I would like that fact to go upon record. I want the entire statement brought forth, if it can be. I want it in all its deformities, if there are any. I want the truth, and nothing but the truth. It did occur to me in looking over the evidence that great latitude had been given these people in maligning my character, which was, I thought, unjustifiable. I simply state this, that I heard on the highway that the rumor had been circulated in the country that these two young men were to be mobbed by the negroes. The report that this gentleman gave to me was that they were not convicted at this trial, and he had heard that they were to be mobbed and that there was a great deal of excitement in the country about it. I proceeded on the way to Hamburgh, and I suppose I got within five or six miles of the place when I saw two or three men preparing to go to Hamburgh; and proceeding further I saw perhaps eight or ten more, by whom I was joined. I got as far as Summer Hill, and there I requested that these gentlemen should remain. I think it was about two o'clock when I got there.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. Who were with you?

A. Five or six persons who came along with me when I was on the road. I went into Hamburgh in my buggy alone. As I passed down the main road leading from Edgefield to Hamburgh I passed the house of this young man Henry Getzen. He was sitting out in his porch, and I called to him from the road and begged him to go across the field to his father-in-law's, Mr. Robert J. Butler's, who lived on the Martintown road, and say that I was on my way to Hamburgh and that I wished him to meet me in town. I went on and drove up to the store of Mr. George Damm, which is the first store that I reached going into town. I think he was the only person that I saw there at that time. I told him that my horse was very much fatigued, that the weather was very hot, and asked that my horse might be fed. I think it must have been between two and three o'clock then in the afternoon. He said he had no oats to feed him, but would go and get some. I told him no; to water him or something of that kind, and I went into the store. I had been there, I suppose, five or six minutes when Mr. Robert J. Butler came in.

Q. State who was with him and how he came there.

A. He came there in his buggy. I think his son, Tommy Butler, came in with him on horseback. He came in in a buggy, with a little negro boy.

Q. How were they armed?

A. I didn't see any arms on Mr. Robert Butler at all. Young Tommy Butler had a carbine on his horse, and perhaps a pistol. I dare say Robert Butler had a pistol, but I didn't see it. I said, "I want you to let me know what is the matter; what is this trouble about?" Mr. Robert Butler sat down and gave me an account of the collision that had occurred between his son-in-law and son and this company of militia. After he had given me an account of it he said that this man Rivers had appointed four o'clock to have the matter investigated; but he said, "I want you to get in the buggy and go up and see the ground yourself with me." I did get in the buggy, and went up with him and surveyed the point at which it was reported that the company had met these two young men—the well, ditch, &c.—and after looking at it we came back to Mr. Damm's.

When passing along the center of the street to get into this street that runs along the river I saw Mr. Butler standing in the door; I saw Tommy for the last time. I think, until here the other day I saw him in Columbia. As I came back Mr. Sparnick, a lawyer from Aiken and judge of probate, was reported to me to be in town, and I requested Mr. Getzen to go up and see him and bring him down to Mr. Damm's store. He went, and Sparnick came back and appeared to be very anxious about this thing; said he hoped some measures would be adopted to put a stop to it. I told him that I was certainly very anxious indeed that there should be; and there was some conversation of a general character. I then said to him, "Now, Mr. Sparnick, I see that there are a great many negroes in town and there is a good deal of excitement in the country, and if a collision does take place, which is certainly to be deprecated, I cannot undertake to be responsible for it." He then said to me, "Suppose I go up, see these people, and bring them down and have a conference." In the mean time a negro man by the name of Sam. Spencer, a leading Republican there—I was eating some lunch which Robert Butler had brought in his buggy in a basket. I had asked for some dinner, being very hungry; and I got the lunch and took it into the back part of Mr. Damm's place; and just as I got there Spencer came in and said, "I would like to see you on private business." I went into a back room and had a talk with Spencer, and he said he thought if we could have a conference with the officers of the company it could be settled. I said certainly, I would be very glad to see them; that Mr. Sparnick had gone up to see them now. He said, "I think they have some objection to coming here now." Mr. Damm said, "Why? I don't see any reason why." Spencer said they were afraid of the armed men. I said, "I see no armed men here. Mr. Robert Butler himself is here, and his son Thomas is here," and I think his other son Harrison had come, and perhaps Henry Getzen. "I don't see any danger in their coming, but if there is any objection I am perfectly willing to meet them there." Spencer said, "Are you willing to meet them at my house?" I said, "Certainly." He said, "I will go up and bring them down." I said, "Very well." His house was very near to Damm's store; I didn't know at the time where it was. Spencer went off and did not return. The hour for the trial, four o'clock, approached. I waited, I suppose, a half hour or three-quarters, for Sparnick and himself to come back. In the mean time these colored people would pass this door that I was in and hawk at me and scrape their feet on the sidewalk, and do a great many things that were disgusting, but I had made up my mind not to get into a bad humor about it, and took no notice of it. I got into the buggy and went down to Rivers's office, and as we rode up to the door this man, who was afterward said to be Rivers's constable, by the name of Ben. Nelson, was sitting up in the door with his feet on the door-facing. Mr. Butler spoke and said to him, "Nelson, is the trial-justice in?" He said, "No, he isn't in." Butler said, "I would be glad if you would go around and say to him that I have my counsel, General Butler, here." Nelson said, "No, I am not going to do any such thing; Mr. Rivers told me to stay here." His manner was extremely offensive and entirely unjustifiable by any conduct on my part or any interference. I think, however, that I should state that pending this the Rev. Mr. Mealing and Dr. Shaw drove up in a buggy, and that was the crowd that was around Judge Rivers's office—Dr. Shaw, Mr. Mealing, Henry Getzen, (Robert J. Butler's son-in-law,) and Tommy Butler and myself and Mr. Robert J. Butler. There was a crowd of negroes assembled there. I got out of my buggy and walked to the door and said very quietly to Nelson, "Is the trial-justice here? I have come here as counsel for these people, and I would like to see him." He still sat there with his feet upon the facing of the door fanning himself very offensively. He said, "No." I said, "Will you go and see him, and tell him that I have come to have this matter investigated?" He said, "No, I am not going to do any such thing;" and then I did lose my patience and my temper both, and spoke to him in a manner very much more graphic than polite. I told him to get out of that chair and give it to me. He said, "No," there was a chair for lawyers. I said, "No, sir, I want this one and I intend to have it." After a while he got up and said, "You can shoot me." I said, "No, I have no such purpose." I then walked out and went and got in the buggy again, and Mr. Butler then said to me, "There is General Rivers's private secretary." I think he called him—a black man by the name of Edwards—"and if you will speak to him I think he will go to see Rivers." I said, "No, I am not going to do any such thing; I do not propose to speak to him again, because I do not propose to be insulted. You can do so if you choose," and he did speak to him. He went off and brought Rivers. I got out of the buggy again and went into the office. Just at this juncture I want to make another statement in connection with that.

After I had been there about an hour I saw that these people meant mischief, as I thought. I could see no occasion for this demonstration or insubordination on their part, and thinking that lawlessness might prevail, I sent across the river for a reporter of the Chronicle and Sentinel newspaper. When he came I invited him into the office. "Now," said I to him, "I want you to take down exactly what is said here. I have nothing to conceal here." He went in with me to Judge Rivers's office.

After Rivers had taken his seat I said, "I would like, as a preliminary matter, to inquire whether or not you are sitting in the capacity of a major-general of militia or as a trial-justice?" Rivers said that would depend upon circumstances. That if the facts were of such a character as to justify his interfering as a trial-justice, he would do so; if not, otherwise. Then he said, "I am sitting here as a peace officer." I said, "That is immaterial to me; I merely wanted to know. I want to investigate the facts of this difficulty, and either capacity will be perfectly agreeable to me."

When we had reached this point this Spencer came into the office. He came up to me and said, "General, I think if you could suspend this trial awhile, we can settle it." I said, "Certainly, I have no objection to suspending it at all." I said, "Just ask the judge; if he suspends it, I am perfectly agreeable." He then went up and applied to Rivers himself.

I would like the committee to bear that in mind, because an entirely different construction has been put upon it in saying that I asked the adjournment of the court. He came in and I said, "If the trial-justice says so, I am perfectly willing." Prince Rivers got up then and said, "The case is suspended for ten minutes." I said, "That is time enough for me." About that time the intendant of the town, a colored man by the name of Gardner, came in and walked up and said to me, "General, I think if you could come around to the council chamber"—which was just beyond Damm's store from where I had gone—"I think these officers would meet you, and this matter can be all arranged." Said I, "Certainly, I am perfectly willing to go," and I went around there with him. I think, perhaps, I got into the buggy and went around to the council chamber, and sat there, I suppose, for twenty-five minutes or more. That was the first time that anything had been said about arms. He said to me that he was very sorry that there was any trouble there, and all that sort of thing. I said: "I see no occasion in the world for any disturbance here, and I am surprised that you, by virtue of your official position as intendant of this town, have not taken it in hand." He said, "I don't know anything about it." We talked very quietly, and I said, "Now, it seems to me that the best solution of this difficulty is for these people to send these arms back to Governor Chamberlain. There is no occasion for them here, and nobody is going to trouble these people; all I can say is that it seems to me that would be the best solution of it;" in which he entirely acquiesced, and thought that that would be reasonable, and I supposed he concurred in the idea. I did not demand the arms at all, and I simply made the suggestion to him in those words.

Q. Did you demand the arms on that or any other occasion?

A. I am coming to that after a while. I said to him that I thought that would be the best solution of the difficulty, and he concurred in it. I waited twenty-five or thirty minutes. These people did not meet me again, and I confess that I was getting a little tired of that sort of thing. I got in the buggy and went over to the city of Augusta. I remembered that I wanted to send some supplies up to my plantation, and I said to Harrison Butler, "If you will drive me over to Augusta I will get my supplies and then go out and spend the night with your father." I thought there was no possible chance for a trial. I suppose I was gone a half or three-quarters of an hour in Augusta. I found that there was a great deal of excitement in Augusta; a great many people asking what the condition of things was in Hamburgh. I said, "Very bad; and I would not be surprised at any time if a riot were to break out there." I came back, and on the bridge on which the highway crosses the river I met four of these people again: this man Sam. Spencer, Picksley, and Edwards, and Simms. They followed me and said, "General, we were going over as a committee to look for you." I said, "What is the matter now?" They said, "We think we have got this matter in such shape as that it can be settled." I then drove back to Damm's store. Spencer asked me to drive around to his house and he thought they would meet me there. I went around here, and when I got back I found that the crowd of white men had been increased to perhaps fifty or sixty; they had come in mounted, and the excitement was increased. I drove up to Spencer's, and I suppose I waited there fifteen or twenty minutes, and still the officers did not come. Lieutenant Cartledge did come up and speak to me. He said that he had come down there and wanted peace. Said I, "Certainly, I want nothing else but peace." I waited some little time, and they did not come, and I drove around to look for Mr. Butler, really intending to go out to his house. When I drove around the square beyond the bank building, on the street that runs under the railroad, I stopped there for some little time talking with this man, and a messenger came and said that Prince Rivers wanted to see me. I said, "You go back and tell Prince Rivers that if he wants to see me he can come to me. I have been four or five times now, and I don't propose to go again; if he wants to see me let him come to me." He did come to me and said, "General, if these people will give up their arms and send them off, what security have you to offer?" I said, "There is no trouble about the security." He said, "Will you guarantee their safety down to Columbia?" "I have nothing to do with that," I said; "I am here professionally, but I do not hesitate to say, as a citizen of the country, that I have no doubt that there will not be any trouble; but if you want security, I take it that there are ten or twenty of the best men in Aiken County who will be security for these arms until they are deposited in the State arsenal, where they belong. I will say that to you, but beyond that I have no right to say anything;" and I rode off. He said to me, "I think that is a fair proposition, and I will go up and see these people." They had assembled in their drill-room. He said, "If they do not do it they must take the consequences."

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. This must have been along toward night?

A. Yes, sir; it was along toward sunset. I rode off from him, and about the time I got about to the corner again, diagonally across the square from this drill-room, the rumor was circulated around that the negroes were going to fight; that they were not going to give up their arms; and very soon after the firing was again commenced and was kept up, I suppose, on both sides. I rode then to the corner of the bank building, which is near Rawle's house, and where Doc Adams said he took refuge behind the lattice later in the night; and I suppose that firing kept up an hour on both sides. The whites who were firing were on that side, and I remained there.

There were several attempts to burn the town. I remember seeing the fire blaze up at one point, and I told somebody that they ought to go up and put it out, and they did so and put the fire out. It was set on fire three times after the negroes were driven out of the building and most of them arrested. I rode around to Sibley's corner, and in the mean time quite a large crowd of people had come over from Augusta. I recognized a few gentlemen who appeared to be walking around there, but the great majority of the crowd I did not know. I rode around, and one of these men came rushing up and said, "General, let us set this house on fire." I said, "No; it will never do; it is wrong to do that." The man was drunk. He said that he had seen Mr. Sibley, to whom the building belonged, and he had said he didn't care a damn; to burn it. I rode off. There were a great many outrages perpetrated. Captain Conway came across the river on horseback, and from him I got information that these people had come from some distance in batteaux and canoes, and, said he, "I think if you will assemble them together and make them a speech they will go back." I said, "Then go around and gather them up, and I will do so." I did not see any occasion for their remaining there, and I did make a request, saying that the trouble was all over, and asking that they would go back across the river.

It was reported to me that some thirty of these negroes had been arrested and were under guard some fifty yards below, toward the South Carolina bridge. These people were very respectful to me, but one man said, "All right; we will go, and then we will sing out 'warehouse.'" I suppose that they were going through stores and warehouses, committing a great many depredations. I suppose that the crowd would go into the warehouses and other places and commit depredations, and they rushed off. I then said to these men, "I have no idea of remaining here all night. I can't control these people, and I am going off." By that time there had been three men killed—Jim Cook and Moses Parks, colored men, and young Merriwether, a white man. Merriwether was the first man killed, and of course the crowd was naturally excited and a good many of them were drunk. They were infuriated by this thing and had passed entirely beyond my control or that of anybody else. I suppose about twelve or one o'clock Colonel A. P. Butler went down there, and he and his friends went off just about the time I did, and I left the crowd committing depredations in the town, and I have no doubt that they committed a great many of them. He said to me, "What is to be done with these negroes?" I said, "I don't know, unless you send them to Aiken." He said, "I have no warrant for them, and I am not going to send them off." I said then, "I suppose you had better release them," and he acquiesced in that view of it. That was Colonel A. P. Butler. I then went off with Robert J. Butler, and went up through the low grounds of his plantation to his house. Next morning I rode up to what they call the dead-ring, and there I recognized one of the men as being a man who had worked for me two years before, Willis Merriwether; and I spoke to him and asked him if he hadn't had enough of the militia, or something of that sort. I knew none of the other negroes. I rode off, and the next morning I heard that those men had been killed. This man Cook was killed, and Parks and Merriwether, before I left there. It was represented to me that Cook was looking over the fence, attempting to get over the inclosure which Adams spoke of here.

He says in his evidence that I had a conversation with him in his room. I never saw the negro, that I know of, in my life. I do not know that I ever heard of him before. He was pointed out to me about a month afterward as I was passing.

He also testified to seeing me at that ring just before these people were taken out and shot. That is utterly false.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. One witness swears—Henry Mays or Dock Adams, I am not sure which—that he heard you tell them to shoot one or more men in that ring about three or four o'clock in the morning.

A. There is not a word of truth in that. I was at Mr. Robert Butler's house at that hour.

* * * * * * *

Q. What time did you leave?

A. I think about twelve o'clock, in company with Mr. Robert Butler and his son Tom, and another man by the name of Shaw. We stopped at his mill, I suppose about half an hour, and then went on up, and I didn't know that the negroes had been killed until the next day. These two men were killed and were lying in the street when I left. Most of them that I saw after they were arrested had their shoes off. I suppose that Cook had taken off his shoes so as to enable him to make less noise in attempting to escape.

Adams says he heard me talking to Attaway at Rawle's house at the veranda. I may perhaps have been around there once. He says that was my headquarters. I had no headquarters. I certainly had a little more sense than to go and get in range of the guns, and that would have been exactly in range. I did not speak to him and did not see him. I did not know that Attaway had been arrested even.

Q. Did you have any control of that mob at all?

A. Not the least. No human power could have controlled them after the first shot was fired. It was an unbridled mob. The men that brought that artillery over there I do not know. One man came up to me who wore spectacles, and another who had beard. I remarked to this man Conway that it was curious that I did not recognize these people, and he said to me, "These are factory people, and the Irish have come over here for the purpose of plunder, and these men are drunk." I had no more control over that mob than I would have over a northeast hurricane. I did try, as long as I could, to prevent what outrages I could, but it would have been impossible for me or any other human power to control it. I certainly did all I could for three hours—a great deal more than I should ever do again—to prevent it.

These people have all said that I went in there at the head of two hundred armed men, and that there were fifteen hundred armed men in town. I think there were, perhaps sixty men from the South Carolina side of the river, generally a class of people who do not commit outrages of that sort, and, I presume, one hundred and fifty or two hundred people from the city of Augusta. I could only make a rough estimate. There were enough to do a great deal of damage and commit a great many wrongs. I have no doubt of that. I went at the head of no army, and had no more idea of having a difficulty when I left home than I have at this instant with this committee. I had no pistol, and nothing more dangerous than a copy of the revised statutes of South Carolina. I deplore it as much as anybody. I had that copy of the statutes in my buggy, for I really did not know what the nature of the investigation was to be, but I thought that might cover everything.

Q. State whether you had any political motive in going there, or in anything that you did there?

A. I never had any political motive about it. Some negro has said—I think one that I met on the bridge—that I said that this thing was to be kept up until November. I never made use of any such language. The canvass in the State did not begin until August 16, and these Democratic clubs were being organized, and the canvass had not really begun. It had been very strongly urged by men in the country to run Governor Chamberlain at that time, and I had no idea of having a difficulty, and never dreamed that there would be one. I had no more idea that there would be a riot than a man living in the Sandwich Islands. That statement is utterly and entirely false.

Q. Is it within your knowledge that any person else had any political motive in what was done there?

A. None at all. So far as I am concerned I had no idea of any political importance being attached to the riot; it was a mere émeute, one of those sudden, spasmodic riots that break out without being really preconsidered.

Q. Do you know anything about the organizing of that militia company? If you do, tell us what you know about it.

A. Well, I did not know at the time, but I have put myself to some trouble to learn something about it.

I want to state one other fact in connection with it. After these events transpired, such a different account of them appeared in the Democratic papers from what actually occurred that this reporter whom I have mentioned wrote me a letter; and, although I know that this note is not competent in any legal sense, and that it is not competent for me to state its contents, yet I think I may say that he stated in that letter that he had not written a line in regard to the matter for any of the Augusta papers. There was a great hurrah made in the papers, and I was condemned without any investigation being made into it, and he wrote to me that he had not written any account for the Augusta papers. It seems to have been picked up by Tom, Dick, and Harry and to have been made the most of, and just put in in that way.

I afterward came to Columbia to see Governor Chamberlain in regard to it, and went down to his office and stated to him substantially as I have stated here. His reply to me was, "I don't see how you are to be blamed for it. The only horrible thing is the killing of these negroes after they were prisoners; that is murder." Said I, "Certainly, that is murder; there is no civilized man can justify that thing; but I had no control over it." He intimated to me that there was no blame to be attached to me. Mr. Youmans, of this city, was with me. The Northern papers took up the matter, and heaped such epithets as "bloodhounds from hell," and all those complimentary allusions, and of course I was very much annoyed about it.

I requested Mr. Youmans afterward to go to the adjutant-general's office and inquire if these people had been commissioned. The adjutant-general had stated that they were regularly commissioned militia.

Mr. Stone was sent over there by Governor Chamberlain as attorney-general of the State, and he made what I think a very unfair report. He did not seem to me to find out the facts. He simply went to the negroes who had been implicated, and made his report accordingly. Subsequently, in a communication which has been published, I denounced that report. In that report he says that this company was reorganized in May, 1876, and that it was the same company that had been organized under Governor Scott's administration in 1872.

When I had this interview with Governor Chamberlain I said to him, "I must say to you, as a citizen of this country, that you are perpetrating a cruel wrong upon these people to allow these arms to stay there—a great wrong, that is unjustifiable." Said he, "I do not know anything about the guns." Whether he did know anything about them or not I do not know.

Mr. Youmans went to the adjutant-general's office for the purpose of ascertaining about this matter of the militia company, but he said that he could find no evidence of any commissions having been issued. I know nothing of the legality or illegality of the militia, but I would like to refer the committee to the law upon this subject.

[Section 9 of the act of March 17, 1874, reorganizing the militia, was read by the witness, as follows:

"SEC. 9. No company can be mustered in unless at least eighty-three men have been enlisted therein. Companies now in the service of the State shall at once reorganize under the provisions of this act, by the members signing proper enlistment-rolls, and being mustered into the service of the State as a part of the national guard; and for the purpose of such reorganization sixty men shall be considered the minimum. Such companies not reorganizing, as herein provided, on or before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1875, shall be disbanded, and the commanding officer of the regiment to which any such company may be attached is hereby authorized and required to take possession of all arms, accouterments, or other military property belonging to the State in the possession of such company; and any member thereof who shall refuse or neglect to deliver the same shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100 nor less than $10, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, and the said property, wherever found, may be taken possession of by the commanding officer of such regiment, or by any officer or soldier acting under his orders: Provided, The general commanding the division to which company or companies may be attached shall have power to extend the time for the reorganization herein required upon the recommendation of the regimental commander."]

The WITNESS. My information, derived from Major Stone, was that this company was not reorganized until May, 1876, and my information further was that they had no authority from the major-general either to have the arms or to reorganize.

Q. Who was the major-general?

A. Prince R. Rivers, sir; so reported. A great many of those guns had been distributed all around the State.

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. You do not mean to have your statement of the law entered as a part of the testimony, I suppose?

A. No, sir; that is a matter of argument, as to whether it is a legally organized company.

Q. Do you know a man in Hamburgh named Louis Schiller?

A. Yes, sir; I have known him for ten years.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. Do you know his general character?

A. I think I do.

Q. What is it?

A. In what respect?

Q. For truth.

A. I think it is bad, sir; he is a man of no character whatever.

Q. I ask you, sir, whether any member of that militia company told you at any time who fired first in that riot, who saw the ammunition?

A. Yes, sir; a man by the name of Pompey Currey told me.

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. Do you know yourself who fired the first shot?

A. I really don't know who it was, because I was clear across the block when I heard the firing.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. State whether you ever made any effort to have that Hamburgh matter investigated judicially.

A. I did, sir; after this thing assumed the proportions that I stated it did, and I heard that this investigation was going on, and that the jurymen consisted of parties implicated, entirely of negroes, and the negro trial-justice and some of the jurymen were the parties implicated in the riots, then I supposed, of course, that political capital was trying to be made out of it, and I sent word to the attorneys that if any warrants were issued for me, if they would let me know, I would report at Aiken at once; and a warrant was issued, and I went down and appeared before Judge Maher, and, on application for bail, it was granted to all the parties concerned, in the sum of $1,000, by Judge Maher——

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. One thousand dollars each?

A. One thousand dollars each; that is, in each case; and the court met on the first Monday of September and all the parties implicated reported again, and I, through my counsel, demanded that a bill of indictment should be given to the grand jury; and my information was that the judge continued the cases upon his own motion. It has been alleged by a man by the name of Albert Carroll, who lives at Aiken, that the reason that the case was not tried was that the court was intimidated.

Q. Both those statements are on information merely?

A. No, sir; one of the witnesses (Carroll) who has testified here has testified that they went down there and intimidated the court with arms, and all that sort of thing. I was entirely ignorant of any purpose to intimidate anybody. There was eighty of us included in this warrant, and I suppose they may have had a party of their friends with them, but I don't think there was at the outside one hundred and fifty white men who accompanied them in Aiken. If there was any disposition to intimidate any one, I did not see it. The men had to come with their wagons, some of them thirty miles, and they brought their supplies with them and camped out and did not appear in the town, but remained out two or three miles. Some of them did not come in at all, and everything was very quiet in Aiken.

I, through my lawyers, demanded to have this case referred to the grand jury for the purpose of having an investigation, but it was denied me, and has been persistently denied me since. The court is now in session, and I am informed that no bill has been given out; and I have never had an opportunity to have an investigation. I have demanded of Governor Chamberlain that he proceed to have an investigation, but it has been denied; for what purpose, I do not know. He is charged with the execution of the laws of the State, and he has declined to do it.

If I am the red-handed ruffian and bloodhound that I am accused of being, either his government is imbecile and utterly worthless or I should have been put in the penitentiary long before this. There is no escape from that dilemma. I have not only asked for this investigation, but I have demanded it again and again.

Q. I ask you whether, under the law of this State, one charged with willful murder is entitled to bail?

A. No, sir; he is not.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. I notice that your State constitution says that the Legislature shall provide for a registration of the voters, of the electors of the State, and the provision seems to be peremptory. Has any law been passed since the present constitution went into effect on the subject?

A. Not within my knowledge. I can state in that connection that there has never, I think, been an assemblage of a Democratic convention in the State since that time that has not urged upon the Legislature the enactment of a registration law in obedience to what is considered to be a mandatory provision of the constitution.

Q. Witnesses have been repeatedly asked in the course of this examination whether or not you have talked with them. I ask you whether you have rendered the minority of the committee any assistance, and, if you say yes, under what circumstances?

A. I have done all that I could to assist the minority of this committee, at its request. You requested me, or some gentleman in the State who was familiar with it, to come here representing that you were a stranger, which we all knew, and unfamiliar with the history of the last year, and the people of the State, and I responded to that request; and I have been in attendance here since last Tuesday to give you what assistance in that respect I could, at some very considerable inconvenience to me.

Q. I ask you whether you have suggested to any witness any statement that he did not voluntarily make?

A. I have not. I have merely attempted to get at the substance of what they were going to state with a view of facilitating your investigation. I have understood that Mr. Corbin and other gentlemen have been aiding the majority of the committee in that way, and I have done so for the minority, at very considerable personal inconvenience, too.

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. There is one point to which I wish to call the attention of General Butler in order to give him a chance for explanation. It is a question of law and was not a proper thing to go into the evidence, but inasmuch as you have already stated it I want to give you a chance to modify your statement if you desire to do so. I see that your constitution provides that all persons shall before conviction be bailable on sufficient securities, except in case of murder when the proof is conclusive or the presumption great, so that there might be many cases where persons charged with murder would be bailable?

A. Oh, certainly, on the charge of murder.

Mr. MERRIMON. You notice I used the words "willful murder."

The WITNESS. There are many instances where parties have been charged with murder and been entitled to bail; but if upon an investigation of the matter the judge decides that it is murder, then, as a matter of course, under the provisions of the constitution the person would not be bailable. If it should appear upon an investigation before the judge that it was murder, of course under the provision of the constitution he would not be entitled to bail.

By Mr. CHRISTIANCY:

Q. The point which I refer to you have not reached. Take a case where it is murder or nothing, if you please, if you can imagine a case of that kind; if the judge should be of the opinion that the evidence was weak and that it was a case that needed investigation, he could take bail?

A. Oh, certainly; it has been done time and again.

Q. It is only where the proof is evident that the prisoner is not bailable?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MERRIMON:

Q. You spoke of persons coming to you; I wanted to ask you at the time if it was difficult for you to move about from place to place; and, if so, specify any reason for it.

A. I have got but one leg, and go on crutches now. I do find great difficulty in getting up and down the steps.

Q. I meant in that riot?

A. I was wearing my artificial leg at that time; but of course it is difficult for me to get about. I was not going on crutches then.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of privilege. In a speech in this House on the 21st instant, I used this language:

The next case is that of Smith against Robertson, from the State of Louisiana. In that case the committee was presented with hundreds of affidavits which tended to show a state of things in that district which, if true, and could have been shown by competent testimony, would, to say the least of it, have made a serious contest for that seat.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] has called my attention to the fact (and I agree with his statement) that this language is inaccurate. I should have stated that the committee was presented with a record and testimony and affidavits comprising one hundred pages or more, which if true would have made a serious contest. I make this statement so that the language may be accurate and just toward the gentleman from Louisiana.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repairs, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors; and the Senate by unanimous consent further agreed to strike out in line 19, page 3 of the said bill, the word "ten" when it occurs after the word "improvement," and insert the word "fifteen;" and further agree to disagree to amendment No. 5 to said bill, and that the bill be enrolled accordingly.

Ordered, That the concurrence of the House of Representatives be requested therein.

NICARAUGUA CANAL.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I insisted yesterday on a limitation of ten days upon the time allowed my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BLOUNT] to submit the views of the minority of that committee upon the bill to incorporate the Nicaraugua Canal company. In conversation with him since, I have learned that he is likely to be occupied so as not to be able to finish the report within that time. I therefore ask that it may be extended to sixty days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to extending the time to sixty days from yesterday; and leave will be granted accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 469) to provide for the sale of certain Kickapoo Indian lands in Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 679) for the relief of William A. Gavett;

A bill (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians; and

A bill (S. No. 114) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes in relation to Indian traders.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for passage a bill to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and read the joint resolution authorizing the building of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence. It has been passed by the Senate and has received a favorable recommendation from the committee of this House. It consists of only two pages.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PARKER. I trust the gentleman will withdraw that call. I have not taken much of the time of the House.

MATERIALS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House now resumes, under the special rule, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3902) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sailing vessels for foreign account. The morning hour under the new rule begins at two minutes before twelve o'clock. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to refer the bill and pending amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by adding the instructions which I send to the desk.

Mr. HASKELL. On that motion I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania so as to refer with the instructions which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

With instructions to report a bill which shall allow, under proper regulations, a drawback or rebate equal to the whole amount of duties paid or chargeable thereon on any and all imported materials which shall be used in the construction and equipment of any steam or sail vessel constructed and equipped within the United States for any citizen of the United States or for any foreign citizen or subject: Provided, That the same shall not apply to any such vessel to be engaged in the coastwise commerce of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. Does not the gentleman intend to insert "or internal" after the word "coastwise?"

Mr. HASKELL. I have reserved a point of order on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia. The motion to refer, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is a motion under Rule XVI, clause 4. A motion to refer or recommit with instructions comes under a special rule, and is to be moved just before or just after the previous qusetion. The motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was made at a stage of the business which compelled it to be made under Rule XVI, clause 4, and a motion to add instructions is not in order now.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before the adoption of the new rule providing for a motion to commit with instructions it was always in order after the second reading of a bill to move to recommit with or without instructions. The effect of the new rule was simply to extend that privilege so that it would be in order to move to recommit with or without instructions after the previous question had been called or ordered. The new rule did not at all restrict the pre-existing privilege, but was, as I have just said, an enlargement of the right of members in this respect, so that this motion might be made after the calling or ordering of the previous question as well as before. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Kansas that it has never been the rule in this House, or, so far as my experience goes in any other legislative assembly, that you could not move to amend a motion to refer by adding thereto instructions.

The Speaker has held, perhaps properly under the new rule, after the previous question has been demanded or ordered by the House it is not in order to move to amend the instructions. But that is after the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. On the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That was the ruling in the last Congress.

Mr. CARLISLE. So it was.

Mr. TUCKER. On the suggestion of my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] I modify the instructions by adding after the word "coastwise" the words "or internal." He thinks it will make it clearer.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Kentucky that I understand very well under the old rule and the general practice a motion to refer with instructions was in order, but under the new rule there is no provision made whatever for instructions, except just before or just after the previous question. The Speaker has ruled on that point two or three times within a month. The Speaker when asked whether he would entertain the motion with instructions has said he would when the proper time came. What was the proper time? As designated by the present Speaker, it is when the previous question was pending or had been ordered. I insist, under that ruling as it stands to-day, under the corrected version of the rule, there is no provision made for instructions except pending the previous question.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Kansas is of opinion the new rule, instead of an enlargement, is a restriction.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes; to that extent it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember to have passed on the precise question here involved. The parliamentary practice has been to permit an amendment to a motion to refer or commit, or recommit, which is substantially the same thing. That, in the opinion of the Chair, is limited to one motion without amendment, under the new rule, after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. In that case the Chair thinks a fair interpretation of the rule limits it to a single motion, and therefore, for that reason, an amendment cannot be made because the House is operating under the previous question, and the operation of the previous question is to bring the House to a vote on the main question at the earliest practical moment. The Chair thinks, under a strict construction, after the previous question has been called or ordered, it can only allow a motion to commit, but no amendment to it, and this it has so held.

But that does not apply to this case, as the previous question has not been demanded, and parliamentary practice would admit of an amendment to this motion to refer; and therefore the Chair holds the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to amend the motion to refer with instructions to be in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. TUCKER. I demand the yeas and nays on my amendment to commit with instructions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 96, not voting 109; as follows:

Mr. NEAL. I am paired with Mr. GEDDES, my colleague, but reserved the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has voted.

On motion of Mr. KELLEY, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KASSON. I now move the previous question on the motion to refer.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to refer the bill with the pending amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TUCKER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, forty-two members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 71, not voting 118; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate further insisted upon its amendment numbered 47 to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States.

HEIRS OF THOMAS TOBY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees under the special rule.

The Committee on Appropriations was called, but did not present any measure for action.

The Committee on the Judiciary was next called.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill (S. No. 543) now on the Speaker's table, and to ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased, of the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, the sum of $45,000 in compliance with the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved March 30, 1881, making provision for the settlement of Thomas Toby's claim: Provided, That the said heirs shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a duly certified copy of the said joint resolution and a full and complete release unto the State of Texas and to the United States of and for all claims whatever of their ancestor against Texas and the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to inquire if the bill has been acted upon by the House committee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; and it is unanimously reported.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Would it be proper to ask for a reading of the report before objections are called for?

The SPEAKER. Not except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would like to know something of the character of the claim.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the report is read as a part of the consideration of the measure if it does not take more than five minutes. Is there objection to the reading of the report, the right to object being reserved? The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk proceeded for five minutes to read the report.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I notice the report is very lengthy; and as the hour has expired, I rise to inquire if the report can be printed in the RECORD, the right of objection being reserved?

The SPEAKER. The right of objection will be reserved.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. And I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the report will be printed in the RECORD. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to know what is the status of this bill.

The SPEAKER. It goes over as unfinished business until to-morrow, subject to objection on being called up.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1660) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Toby, have considered the same, and make the following report:

The committee believe that this claim is a just and meritorious demand against the State of Texas, and properly payable out of the funds appropriated and set apart by Congress under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress approved February 28, 1855."

The validity and merit of this claim are supported by the highest evidence, a portion of which the committee deem it proper to submit herewith.

Thomas Toby, now deceased, was a citizen of New Orleans during the years 1836, 1837, and 1838, and was a merchant of large means. He espoused the cause of Texas in the war of the revolution between Texas and Mexico, and this claim upon Texas is for money loaned and advances made by him in supplies and munitions of war to Texas upon request of and in pursuance of negotiations with the authorities of that republic.

In support of the validity and justness of the claim, the committee refer to the following documentary evidence, the originals of which are now on file in the office of the comptroller of public accounts of the State of Texas:

[Senate Journals, Seventeenth Legislature, page 61.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
Velasco, May 28, 1836.

SIR: In times of general prosperity, the capitalist who advances funds to a government deserves nothing more than a fair remuneration for his loan; but when an infant republic, just sprung into existence, without a government at home or credit abroad, is compelled to carry on a defensive war against a powerful tyrant, whose watchword is extermination, and whose march is traced by the desolation left behind him, when a cloud of the most dark and angry character was lowering over us, when "hope deferred" had almost sunk into despondency, the man who, like you, could fearlessly step forward and risk his fortune and credit in our behalf deserves and receives a nation's gratitude.

But for the frequent and well-timed aid you have so liberally afforded, it is scarcely probable that we could have sustained the war up to this period, and Texas, the fairest portion of the continent, might now have been what Santa Anna has threatened to make it, a howling wilderness.

WM. H. JACK, Secretary of State.

TO THOMAS TOBY, Esq., New Orleans.

Also the following:

[From President Burnet.]

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Velasco, June 20, 1836.

SIR: Texas never required the prompt and efficient action of the friends of human liberty more than at this moment. Your zeal, as heretofore manifested, is a sure guarantee that you will not be lacking now.

Your obedient servant,

DAVID G. BURNET.

TO THOMAS TOBY, Esq., Texas Agent, New Orleans.

Also the following:

[From President Houston.]

COLUMBIA, TEXAS, February 21, 1837.

MY DEAR SIR: You will ere this have seen Colonel Thruston, the commissary-general of Texas. With him were sent requisitions, and I hope to God you will have them filled. It is important to us. If our army is not supplied all our blood has been shed in vain.

Your friend,

SAM HOUSTON.

To THOMAS TOBY, Esq.

Also the following:

COLUMBIA, TEXAS, March 10, 1837.

DEAR SIR: I desire that five hundred stand of arms be forwarded to the army as soon as possible, and for God's sake do send breadstuffs to the army and to Velasco—to the army for fifteen hundred men for two months and to Velasco for two hundred men.

Last night I heard from the army that there had been no breadstuffs for ten days past, nor had they news of any coming.

Do, my friend, I beg you, forward provisions agreeably to the requisitions made by Colonel Thruston. The supplies sent for are indispensable to the salvation of the army. Unless our friends now sustain us it will leave Texas in a situation as deplorable as it was on the 20th of March last year.

You need entertain no fears of being amply requited by the government for any advances which you may make to the country. I feel confident that every allowance will be made by the government so as to give complete indemnity to those who may be responsible for any aid rendered to our necessities.

Your friend,

SAM HOUSTON.

To THOMAS TOBY, Esq.

Also the following:

COLUMBIA, March 17, 1837.

DEAR SIR: Seventeen hundred men are now in the field, and about five hundred not armed. The supplies can only last four days longer. For God's sake do something, or we must lose all that we have gained, and our country. The supplies in it are much exhausted.

We must be supplied!

You may rest assured on receiving ample remuneration for any responsibilities which you may incur.

Your friend,

SAM HOUSTON.

To THOMAS TOBY, Esq.

This claim has been presented from time to time, since the late war, to the Legislature of the State of Texas. The proceedings of the several Legislatures which have considered it will show that its validity and merit have been uniformly recognized and acknowledged, and payment thereof directly by the State declined, upon the ground that Texas had made ample provision for the payment of all such claims by the terms of the compact entered into between the United States and Texas on the 28th day of February, 1855.

In order to show how the claim has been regarded by the Legislature of Texas, the committee refer to the following:

[See Senate Journals, Seventeenth Legislature, pages 60 and 61.]

SENATE CHAMBER, Austin, March 2, 1879.

The undersigned members of the senate avail themselves of the privilege of spreading upon the journals their reasons for voting for the report of the committee on finance, which recognized the fact that the State of Texas is indebted to the late Thomas Toby, and proposing to pay the representatives of said Toby the sum of $45,000 in satisfaction for all demands against the State.

The claim of Thomas Toby originated during the struggle between Texas and Mexico. Mr. Toby was distinguished at an early period of the contest as the friend of Texas and constitutional freedom. He was made the agent of Texas, and intrusted with the sale of land scrip to the quantity of 500,000 acres. President Burnet indorsed him officially as such in May, 1836, and continued to do so until the end of his term. Soon after being inaugurated, President Houston addressed Thomas Toby & Bro. officially as the agents of the Republic of Texas. His first communication was dated November 8, 1836, and the correspondence extended to about two-thirds of President Houston's term of office.

The official correspondence establishes the following facts:

1. The Mexican Government was straining every nerve to make another formidable invasion of Texas during the summer of 1836.

2. Texas had few men in the field, and called for volunteers.

3. Thomas Toby advanced money, arms, ammunition, clothing, and provisions. He made advances to fit out war vessels, and to forward volunteers to Texas. In short, he furnished Texas the sinews of war.

4. If he had not done so, the army of Texas would have been compelled to disband and the people would have been driven out or butchered.

5. In February, 1837, President Houston forwarded requisitions to Thomas Toby, and said: "I hope to God you will have them filled; it is important to us. If our army is not supplied, all our blood has been in vain." He repeated that declaration substantially on other occasions.

6. President Houston promised to repay Thomas Toby for advances.

7. This debt was incurred to maintain the independence of Texas. The Texas army, supplied by Thomas Toby, prevented a Mexican invasion, and the consequences resulting from the war of extermination declared and waged against Texas.

8. Thomas Toby accounted for every acre of land scrip placed in his hands, and presented vouchers for money expended for the Republic of Texas; they are on record in the comptroller's office. In accordance with a legislative resolution the comptroller and the treasurer of this State made a statement of the Thomas Toby claim, and reported the sum of over $45,000 due Thomas Toby, as per vouchers on file.

9. Ex-Governor Pease, ex-Comptroller Shaw, ex-Auditor Swisher, and Colonel Brewster testify to the justice of Thomas Toby's claim, and that it has never been paid.

10. There is no evidence in any department of this government known to us of any payment of Thomas Toby's claim.

11. We believe said claim was made under circumstances which constitute it almost sacred; that equity, gratitude, and a proper regard for the reputation of our State demands its recognition and liquidation.

We cannot subscribe to the doctrine that length of time lessens and discharges our obligations to pay a claim which has been presented eight times before even a statement thereof was made by the authorized agents of the State. We feel that in voting to recognize the claim of Thomas Toby we were shielding Texas from the charge of repudiating a claim she is morally bound to pay as an act of gratitude and justice to a noble man who was her friend and benefactor in the dark days of danger and peril.

JOHN S. FORD.
A. P. McCORMICK.
CHAS. D. GRACE.
JOHN M. DUNCAN.

We also call attention, in this connection, to a certificate signed by Hon. E. M. Pease, formerly governor of Texas, which is as follows:

[Statement of ex-Governor E. M. Pease.]

I, E. M. Pease, of the city of Austin, Texas, do hereby certify that during the years 1836 and 1837 I was for part of the time chief clerk in the treasury department of the Republic of Texas, and for part of the time comptroller of public accounts of said republic; that during these years Thomas Toby, deceased, late of New Orleans, Louisiana, was the agent of said republic in New Orleans for forwarding volunteers to Texas, and for the purchase of provisions, clothing, and other supplies and munitions of war for said republic, and that as such agent he made large advances for those articles for said republic. I have examined his account against said republic, which was acted on by the Legislature of Texas at its last session, and can say from personal knowledge that a large part of the items therein charged are correct. I was familiar with the debt of the late Republic of Texas, and was governor of Texas at the time of the payments of most of said debt at the Treasury of the United States under the act of the Congress of the United States of the 28th of February, 1855, and knew that no part of the debt of said Toby was ever paid, either by the State of Texas or by the United States.

E. M. PEASE.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, December 5, 1881.

The last Legislature of Texas passed the following act, which is conclusive of the validity and merit of the claim:

[Joint resolution providing for the settlement of the claim of Thomas Toby, deceased.]

(See page 132, Laws of Seventeenth Legislature.)

Joint resolution making an appropriation for the settlement of Thomas Toby claim.

Whereas it has been satisfactorily established that the late Republic of Texas was indebted to Thomas Toby, deceased, late of New Orleans, in a large sum of money for advances made and supplies furnished and services rendered between the 24th day of May, 1836, and April 1, 1838, to aid and sustain her in her struggle for independence, which remains unpaid; and

Whereas there is a balance now of $101,113.27 in the United States Treasury belonging to the Texas debt fund applicable to the payment of all revolutionary claims of which this is one: Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That the sum of $45,000 be, and the same is hereby, acknowledged and validated as a just debt against the reserved fund held by the Government of the United States for the payment of the debt of the late Republic of Texas; and our Representatives in Congress are hereby respectfully requested, by bill or otherwise, to move Congress to make an appropriation out of said reserved fund for the full payment of this claim, and that on such appropriation by Congress the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased, are hereby authorized and empowered to apply for and receive from the proper authorities of the United States the said sum of $45,000 in full, without scale or abatement.

SEC. 2. That Texas will not regard the payment of said claim as a credit on the amount now owing to the State of Texas by the United States, unless the heirs of Thomas Toby shall first, before memorializing Congress or applying to any Department of the General Government for payment of said claim, file in the office of the treasury of the State of Texas a full release of all claims against the State of Texas which may remain unsatisfied by the United States out of money due Texas and reserved by the United States.

Approved March 30, A. D. 1881.

The heirs of Toby have executed and filed the release contemplated by the second section of the act, as appears from the following certificate:

[Acceptance of release by State treasurer.]

I, F. R. Lubbock, treasurer of the State of Texas, do hereby certify that in accordance with "Joint resolution No. 9, making an appropriation for the settlement of Thomas Toby claim," approved March 30, A. D. 1881, the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased, have this day filed in the office of the treasurer of the State of Texas a full release of all claims against the State of Texas which may remain unsatisfied by the United States out of money due Texas and reserved by the United States.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the treasurer of the State of Texas, this 12th day of November, A. D. 1881.

[L. S.] F. R. LUBBOCK, Treasurer.

It will be observed that the foregoing act of the Legislature of Texas recognizes this claim as a "just debt against the reserved fund held by the Government of the United States for the payment of the debt of the late Republic of Texas." It will be remembered that a controversy in respect of the northwestern boundary of Texas existed between the United States and Texas, from the annexation up to the 9th day of September, 1850, when the question of boundary was definitely settled by an act of Congress, which was assented to by the State of Texas.

Section 1, articles 4 and 5, of that act is as follows:

"SEC. 1, ART. 4. The United States, in consideration of said establishment of boundaries, cession of claim to territory, and relinquishment of claims, will pay to the State of Texas the sum of $10,000,000 in a stock bearing 5 per cent. interest, and redeemable at the end of fourteen years, the interest payable half-yearly at the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 1, ART. 5. Immediately after the President of the United States shall have been furnished with an authentic copy of the act of the General Assembly of Texas accepting these propositions, he shall cause the stock to be issued in favor of the State of Texas, as provided for in the fourth article of this agreement: Provided, also, That no more than five millions of said stock shall be issued until the creditors of the State holding bonds and other certificates of stock of Texas for which duties on imports were specially pledged, shall first file at the Treasury of the United States releases of all claim against the United States for or on account of said bonds or certificates, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify anything contained in the third article of the second section of the 'Joint resolution for annexing Texas to the United States,' approved March 1, 1845, either as regards the number of States that may hereafter be formed out of the State of Texas, or otherwise."

In compliance with the provisions of the act above quoted, the Government of the United States issued the stock and paid over to the State of Texas five millions of it, and retained in the Treasury the remaining five millions, to await the contingency provided for. The consideration for the payment to Texas of the $10,000,000 in 5 per cent. stock was the relinquishment on the part of Texas of all claim to 66,000,000 of acres of land then claimed by Texas. And thus the disputed boundary question was settled. Congress was induced to insert the proviso in the foregoing act from the following state of facts, which then existed:

While the Republic of Texas was struggling to obtain its independence of Mexico, it became necessary to use extraordinary means to obtain supplies for its army and for munitions of war. From time to time the authorities of the republic proclaimed that the entire resources of the country were pledged to repay those who might advance money, supplies, or munitions of war. The congress of the republic in various and sundry acts pledged, not only the faith and the ordinary resources of the republic, but its revenues as well, for the payment of debts.

When Texas was incorporated into the Union, the creditors of Texas, who claimed that the revenues of the late republic had been pledged for the payment of their claims, set up demands against the Government of the United States for the payment of such claims, upon the ground that the Government of the United States, by the incorporation of Texas into the Union, had made itself liable for these debts. Texas recognized her liability to pay all the debts which had been contracted for and on account of the revolution, but claimed the right to scale them upon such principles of equity and justice as seemed right to the State, and hence the creditors made demand upon the Government of the United States for the full amount of their claims. Thus the matter stood when the act of Congress already referred to was passed, and while Congress did not admit the liability of the Government to pay these claims, it avoided the issue by providing that five millions of the money due Texas should not be paid over until all the creditors referred to should file releases of all claims against the Government of the United States. Shortly after the passage of this act the President of the United States, Mr. Fillmore, submitted to Mr. Corwin, then Secretary of the Treasury, the question as to what classes of creditors ought to file the releases contemplated by the act of Congress. In his reply, which reviews the financial legislation of the congress of the late Republic of Texas, we find the following:

"The only provision of the beforementioned laws which it seems important to consider as bearing on the act of Congress in question is the fifteenth section of the act of the 14th January, 1840. That section contains the following provision:

"'Be it further enacted, That for the redemption of all loans negotiated by the authority of the Republic of Texas, independently of the reservation of the sinking fund, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, its revenues, and public faith are solemnly pledged.' It seems perfectly clear that a pledge of all the revenue of a government whose organic form admitted the power to raise revenue by "duties on imports" is a special pledge of duties on imports as well as all the other sources of taxation known to such government. * * * If, then, the pledge of all "revenues," without the enumeration of items or classes, does not include duties on imports, neither does it, for the same reason, include any other species of revenue. And thus it would follow that nothing was pledged by the act in question, an absurdity too flagrant for consideration. Such a construction would admit the possibility of an intention by the congress of Texas to hold out to the world a delusive promise seeming to be substantial, and yet in fact offering no real security. The section referred to, therefore, must be considered as pledging specially the duties on imports as well as any other species of revenue possible under the government then existing. If these views are correct, all loans negotiated by Texas prior to the 14th of January, 1840, and under that act, are secured by a pledge of duties on imports. It follows that the five millions of stock specified in the act of Congress should not be issued to Texas until releases are filed as prescribed by all owners of that portion of the debt of Texas."

The report was adopted by the President on the 13th of September, 1851, and he directed that the five millions of stock should not be paid over until the releases contemplated by the report should be filed. As before stated, the creditors, for the most part, declined to file such releases, and the controversy continued. In 1853 the President of the United States, Mr. Pierce, submitted the question of his powers and duties in respect to this fund under the act of Congress referred to to Mr. Cushing, then Attorney-General. The Attorney-General replied, reviewing the subject at length. In view of a subsequent act of Congress on the subject it is only important to say that the Attorney-General dissented from the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Corwin, in several particulars. The creditors would not file releases and the Government declined to pay over to Texas the balance due her, and such was the situation of this controversy when the subject was again brought before Congress in 1855. By an act approved February, 1855, Congress appropriated $7,750,000 in lieu of the five millions of stock due Texas, and provided that—

"The Secretary of the Treasury should pay the creditors of the late Republic of Texas who hold such bonds or other evidence of debt for which the revenues of that republic were pledged as were reported to be within the provisions of said act of September 9, 1850, by the report of the late Secretary of the Treasury to the President of the United States, and approved by him on the 15th September, 1851, or which come within the provision of said act according to the opinion of the present Attorney-General addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury and dated September 26, 1853, pro rata."

It is important to observe the fact that the act of 1855 broadens the scope of the act of 1850 in respect of the classes of creditors. All classes comprehended by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in 1851 and all such as were embraced by the opinion of the Attorney-General are provided for. And thus the differences of opinion as to the proper construction of the act were obviated. It is proper to say also that under the act of 1855 the Government of the United States assumed the duty of paying out the money to the creditors pro rata. The fund was provided by Texas.

The five millions of stock had remained in the Treasury from 1850 until 1855. The interest on the same and premium added made the value of the stock $6,500,000. Texas made claim against the United States for $2,000,000 for losses incurred prior to the 14th of February, 1855, from Indian depredations, &c. As the amount then due Texas, $6,500,000, principal, interest, and premium on stock, was not sufficient, in the judgment of Congress, to pay the classes of creditors comprehended in the reports referred to, the Representatives of the State of Texas proposed to acquit the Government of the United States for the claim for Indian depredations and allow the amount to be appropriated for the payment of the creditors. Congress reduced the claim of Texas for Indian depredations from $2,000,000 to $1,250,000. This amount, added to the $6,500,000, made the sum of $7,750,000, the sum named in the act of 1855.

The last section of the act provided that the act was not to take effect until Texas assented to its terms and released the Government of the United States from all liability for payment of losses on account of Indian depredations prior to the 14th February, 1855. Texas complied with this provision of the law.

It will therefore be observed that Texas furnished the entire amount set apart and appropriated by the act of 1855 for the payment of such creditors.

Under the provisions of the act the records of the Treasury Department show the following disbursements and payments made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States out of said fund:

During the fiscal year 1856	$6,435,931 51
During the fiscal year 1857	1,008,583 94

Leaving a balance of $101,113.27; which has been carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

The claim of the heirs of Thomas Toby is believed to be the only remaining claim properly payable out of this fund.

In regard to the long delay which has attended the adjustment and presentation of this claim, the committee submit the report of the late auditors of Texas, made to the Legislature of that State:

(See Senate Journal, Seventeenth Legislature, page 62.)

AUSTIN, TEXAS, January 26, 1881.

To His Excellency Governor O. M. Roberts, and the honorable the senate and house of representatives of the State of Texas:

We, the undersigned, late auditor and comptroller, composing the auditorial board created for the purpose of ascertaining and adjusting the debt of the late Republic of Texas, do hereby certify that it appears from the records of the treasury department of the republic that the accounts and vouchers of Thomas Toby for supplies and munitions of war furnished the Government of Texas during the years 1836, 1837, and 1838 were filed for payment in said treasury department as early as the year 1838. But for the fact that the government was without money, a settlement was deferred from time to time until the creation of our board, which we found still on file unsettled and unacted upon.

Some time during the existence of the auditorial board, between 1848 and 1856, when it expired by limitation, Colonel Thomas F. McKinney, the legal agent of Toby's heirs, applied to us to go into an adjustment of the accounts and issue a certificate for the amount found to be due, principal and interest. We informed him that under the law we had no authority to allow interest on open accounts, but that we would examine and issue certificates of indebtedness for the principal of the debt found to be due.

Upon mature reflection of the agent, he came to the conclusion that if he accepted a certificate for the amount of the principal only it would prejudice a future claim for interest, and believing that it could not be barred by the statute creating the board, as it had been filed with the auditor and comptroller according to the provisions of the statute, he concluded that it would be better for him to appeal directly to the Legislature; consequently we did not examine the accounts.

It was not brought before the Legislature of 1860, and the war ensuing shortly afterward prevented any immediate action on the claim.

As an act of justice to the heirs of this early and fast friend of Texas, we beg to state that among all the claims acted on by us, amounting to many millions of dollars, there was not a more meritorious one than the claim of Thomas Toby.

JOHN M. SWISHER, late Auditor.
JAS. B. SHAW, late Comptroller.

In addition to the foregoing, the committee find that Thomas Toby, in the year 1839—then in great financial embarrassment by reason of his advancements to Texas—lost his health and remained an invalid until the year 1841, when he died. Mrs. Clarence Toby, his widow, engaged the services of an attorney, Mr. Thomas H. McKinney, who died in a few years after his engagement. Subsequently to his death Mrs. Toby died.

Your committee, in view of all the facts and circumstances attending this claim, believe that it is a just and meritorious one against the State of Texas, as declared by the Legislature of that State, and that it should be paid out of the money now in the Treasury which Texas provided for the payment of such claims. Such an adjustment of this long deferred claim seems to be just, and the State of Texas, by an act of its Legislature, herein set out, not only assents to such an adjustment, but requests her Representatives in Congress to favor an appropriation of a sufficient amount of the balance of the fund on hand to pay this claim.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

LOSS OF THE JEANNETTE.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to convene, as soon as practicable, a court of inquiry to investigate the circumstances of the loss in the Arctic seas of the exploring steamer Jeannette; and of the death of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and others of her officers and men; including an inquiry into the condition of the vessel on her departure, her management up to the time of her destruction, the provision made and plans adopted for the several boat's crews upon their leaving the wreck, the efforts made by the various officers to insure the safety of the parties under their immediate charge, and for the relief of the other parties; and into the general conduct and merits of each and all the officers and men of the ill-fated expedition; and to submit the finding of such court of inquiry to Congress.

Mr. KASSON. I think that resolution should go to the Naval Committee. This was a private ship with volunteer officers.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well; let it be referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration House bill No. 4169.

Mr. PARKER. I object.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. VAN HORN. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I report the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 262.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881, 214,000 for the use of the members of the House of Representatives, 56,000 for the use of the members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] if that is the usual number.

Mr. VAN HORN. It is the number printed last year.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask the question that we may anticipate any complaint about the expense of this printing.

Mr. KASSON. I understand that the reports for two years are combined; that owing to the lateness of the publication the Commissioner of Agriculture has combined the two reports. The resolution, if that be the fact, should be framed so as to show it.

Mr. VALENTINE. This is for the year 1881. The resolution provides the usual number and is in the usual form.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquired whether it is usual to submit this as a concurrent resolution.

Mr. VAN HORN. That is the practice.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use of the Department of the Interior and its subordinate bureaus and offices, 100 copies of the second edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. VAN HORN. I will state that this involves no cost. The publications are printed and are in the office of the Secretary of State. But the Secretary of State cannot deliver these copies to the Interior Department without authority. That authority is wanted.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DECISIONS OF FIRST COMPTROLLER.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and is, required to print not more than one volume each year of the decisions and opinions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department, with such explanatory matter as he may furnish, and to furnish for the use of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress 10 copies thereof, to the Comptroller 2,000 copies, and for distribution in the manner provided in section 7 of the act of June 20, 1874, (18 Statutes at Large, page 113,) providing for the publication of the Statutes, one-half the number therein mentioned.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed to supply the Public Printer as rapidly as possible with the copy of the digested summary and alphabetical list of private claims presented to the House of Representatives from the Forty-second to the Forty-sixth Congress, inclusive, in preparation by him, and that the Public Printer proceed to execute it so that it be finished by the meeting of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask that the letter of the Clerk of the House be read in connection with this resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., July 8, 1882.

SIR: On the 9th of February, 1881, in the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress, the Clerk of the House was directed "to have completed the digested summary and alphabetical list of the private claims presented to the House of Representatives from the Forty-second to the Forty-sixth Congress, inclusive." That work is approaching completion. I have the honor herewith to submit as a specimen of it the portion under the letter "A," and to request the authority of the House for the printing of it as fast as it may be completed, in order that it may be laid upon the desks of members for use at the beginning of the next session of Congress. The work has been prepared with care, and is undergoing thorough revision, with a view to as great accuracy as can be obtained.

I have the honor to inclose a copy of a resolution and to ask its adoption by the House.

Very respectfully, yours,

EDWD. McPHERSON,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The resolution was adopted.

LAND LAWS, ETC.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of more copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That 8,500 additional copies of the codified land laws and history of the public domain of the United States, compiled and prepared by the public-land commission, embraced in House Executive Document No. 47, with all subsequent laws which may have been passed by Congress prior to the adjournment of the present session, be printed and bound; of which each Senator and Representative shall receive twenty copies and each Delegate thirty copies, for distribution among their constituents, and the residue shall be for distribution by the Secretary of the Interior.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN. I move to amend the title by striking out the word "more" and inserting the word "additional;" so that it will read, "for the printing of additional copies," &c.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

BANK-EXTENSION ACT.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of the act approved July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State library.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, to the State library of each State having or that shall hereafter have and maintain a State library one bound copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of each session of Congress or special session of the Senate, including the present session of Congress.

Mr. KASSON. It seems to me that no provision is made with regard to back copies. There is a limit to the number of copies in possession of the Public Printer. I would inquire in case the edition is not sufficient to comply with the law what would be the result?

Mr. SPRINGER. This begins with this Congress.

Mr. KASSON. It does not say so.

Mr. SPRINGER. It uses the word "hereafter."

Mr. AINSLIE. I desire to offer an amendment, to include the Territorial libraries.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the clause be read which the gentleman says limits the operation of this joint resolution to this Congress. If there is not such a limit there should be.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let it all be read.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution as amended will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, to the State and Territorial library of each State and Territory having or that shall hereafter have and maintain a State or Territorial library one bound copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of each session of Congress or special session of the Senate, including the present session of Congress.

Mr. KASSON. It should read beginning with the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. It says "including the present session of Congress."

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is certainly correct in his criticism.

Mr. KASSON. It should read beginning with the present Congress; and then, as it is a perpetual order, there will be no need of saying "including the present session."

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a called session that would not be included if the joint resolution is limited to the present session. I would suggest to strike out the words "including the present session of Congress," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "beginning with the Forty-seventh Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN. I move to amend the title of the joint resolution so as to read "to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN. I move to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF SURGEON-GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following concurrent resolution of the Senate with a recommendation that the same be adopted:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the Navy Department 1,000 copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] whether it has been customary heretofore to make this publication?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; and this is merely for additional copies.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for this publication?

Mr. SPRINGER. This is to publish 1,000 additional copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy. The only reason that the committee can give for the necessity of this is that the officials of the Government came before that committee and represented the necessity of this publication. Of course we cannot ourselves tell where all these books go; but when gentlemen in charge of these bureaus come before our committee and represent that in order to meet the demands on the Department there should be additional copies we must accede to their representations. This only provides for 1,000 additional copies.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many are published now under the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I presume only the usual number.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many?

Mr. SPRINGER. Nineteen hundred and fifty copies.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it is now proposed to print 1,000 copies extra?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; at a cost of $2,800.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I submit, in view of the unexampled amount of printing ordered by this House, that unless the Committee on Printing has absolute assurance of the necessity of these extra copies they should not be ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOL-

MAN] in thinking that 1,000 extra copies of this document for the use of the Navy Department are an extraordinary number, and unless the gentleman from Illinois can give a better reason than he has given just now I think the gentleman from Indiana is eminently correct in holding that this printing should not be ordered. I think the gentleman from Illinois ought to be able to give a better reason than the one he has given.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it will be found I have given the same reason that the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] gives when he brings in recommendations from the Departments for appropriations. All that he knows about them or can know about them is that the head of the Department has come before him and told him that the Department must have the money.

Mr. ATKINS. If I do not know more about such a matter than the gentleman does about this I go against it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman in what case he has taken the precaution to go into the Departments and examine the books to determine whether they needed the appropriations asked for?

Mr. ATKINS. I have gone into every single Department of the Government for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a Senate resolution proposing the printing of 1,000 extra copies of this document, which will cost between two and three thousand dollars. It is a matter of the utmost indifference to me whether you order this publication or not; but I feel it my duty to report the resolution, as the Department desires these documents.

If the House determines to make a point upon this little matter I hope it will continue in the good work. I have no personal interest in the question; it is a public matter. You order printing here by the millions of dollars. Here is a proposition to print extra copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy, at a cost of two or three thousand dollars. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted; there being—ayes 53, noes 14.

CATALOGUE OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back without amendment the bill (S. No. 329) to authorize the preparation and publication of a classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of all Government publications from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be prepared and published, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, a classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of all publications made by the authority of the Government of the United States and the preceding government of the Colonies, and all Departments, bureaus, and offices thereof, from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881; and upon the request of the said joint committee the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives and the heads of all the Executive Departments and of all the bureaus and offices thereof shall furnish to said joint committee all such information and assistance in reference to said publications as will facilitate or assist in the completion of said work; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this act, which sum may be expended as additional pay or compensation to any officer or employé of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that this bill, as it makes an appropriation of money, must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not press that point of order upon this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill proposes an unjustifiable expenditure of money. There is no information as to what this work will cost.

Mr. SPRINGER. I propose to give the gentleman information if he will withdraw his point of order. This bill makes an appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the bill does not grant additional pay? I think it reads that way.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill authorizes the joint committee, if any employé or officer of the Government assists in making this index, to say how much additional pay shall be allowed for such service.

A MEMBER. That is contrary to law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such allowances to officers of the Government for extra services are unlawful unless there is express authority of law for them. This bill, if passed, will be a law for that purpose. If we call upon officers of the Departments to furnish us the kind of information required in this work, information in the preparation of which they will have to work out of hours, we must expect to pay them for this extra service; otherwise we cannot get the work done. The bill simply provides for the preparation of an analytical catalogue of all the publications of the Government from its foundation to the present time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Chair to take note of the fact that the point of order on this bill has not been withdrawn, but is still reserved.

Mr. SPRINGER. Every gentleman who has had experience in consulting public documents knows how difficult it is to find any publication that has been made. Such publications are scattered all over the city in different places. We do not know what they are or where to find them.

Mr. KASSON. I think it is of great importance to the history of the Government that such an index should be prepared.

Mr. SPRINGER. It can be furnished at very small expense—much less, I think, than the amount appropriated in this bill; but the joint committee has suggested this sum out of abundant caution. I think gentlemen of the House when they have procured the information which this catalogue is intended to supply will find this the most economical and valuable of the publications of Congress.

Mr. KASSON. It is to be practically an index to the entire statistical history of the country.

Mr. SPRINGER. Exactly; the gentleman states the matter correctly. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. VAN HORN.]

Mr. VAN HORN. It is economical in other respects. Gentlemen who have not had anything to do with the Committee on Printing are unaware, as a matter of course, of the immense amount of printing which is sometimes done that is entirely useless. That committee have no means now of knowing whether a resolution requiring printing to be done should be reported favorably or not, as they have no means of determining whether the printing asked for has been done already and there are copies enough in existence to answer all practical purposes. If this index be provided it will stop a great many extravagances in public printing and may result in the saving of thousands and thousands of dollars every session of Congress.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Has the gentleman any estimate of the cost? Is it proposed that we shall launch out into this new scheme without having any information of where it will take us? Has the gentleman from Illinois any idea of how much the cost of this work will be?

Mr. ATKINS. It will cost nearer $1,000,000 than $10,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ATKINS. The clerical force required will cost more than the sum named in the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. The cost is limited in the resolution to $10,000.

Mr. ATKINS. That will not amount to anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the work is once commenced it matters very little how much is appropriated in the first place, as that is no criterion of what the ultimate cost will be.

Mr. ATKINS. How many volumes is this book to consist of? It may run to one hundred volumes.

Mr. VAN HORN. I have no doubt, in my own judgment, Mr. Speaker, that this catalogue will save twice the sum of money which will be required to get it up. It will enable the Committee on Printing to see at once what printing has been done and avoid any extravagant reprinting.

Mr. COX, of New York. It will not be finished in our life-time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the amount of money appropriated in the bill does not complete the work contemplated the Committee on Printing will not ask, as I am sure I will not, for any further sum. Indeed it is required to be completed with this sum of money. This is not in the nature of an extravagant appropriation at all, but it is an appropriation of $10,000 for the preparation of a catalogue of public documents to which we can turn and find out what has been ordered to be printed and what has not. The Committee on Printing have no such means of knowing what has heretofore been printed. You might as well not print documents at all as to print them and then hide them away where nobody can find them. That is what we have been doing, and although a vast number of documents have been printed, neither the Committee on Printing nor anybody else can find them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Some of them are forever lost sight of as soon as they are printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will look into the public documents and he will find a vast amount of valuable information he would do well to consult.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My friend does not show in his ordinary conduct and conversation he has followed the advice he gives to me, or consultation has not produced the result in his case he would indicate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on ruling on the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the point of order is sustained, would it be in order then to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering the joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the resolution, its effect if it becomes a law would be to provide printing for the benefit of the two Houses. It is not, however, specific in that respect. It is therefore a privileged matter to be reported from the Committee on Printing. Being privileged, the question remains whether or not it is subject to the point of order that it must be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it provides for the appropriation of money out of the Treasury. The right to report at any time carries with it the right of present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to suggest that the rule applies to appropriation bills, and the Committee on Appropriations can report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is coming to that. The only doubt the Chair has is whether it is subject to that point of order. Of course, appropriation bills the rules expressly provide shall have
